VARIAZIONI ED IMPROVVISATI SU UN TEMA ORIGINALE FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

J. H. FOULDS.
(Op. 4.)

Price Two Shillings net.

"Is interesting from beginning to end, and shows considerable accomplishment, as well as a leaning towards the modern influences in the art. . . . The ideas are good, the theme is developed with great ingenuity, there is plenty of variety as well as technical difficulty in the variations, and the whole composition is one that calls for high praise."—The Times.

"We find these variations extremely interesting. . . . Here is a very original theme upon which is built a series of as really original variations, stoned upon stone, so to speak, until at length is completed an admirable, even beautiful, musical structure that should find its way into many a pianist's répertoire."—The Queen.

BEETHOVEN AND HIS NINE SYMPHONIES

BY GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

- b.* The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c.* Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN
OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

What Schumann said of J. S. Bach was certainly true: "Music owes almost as great a debt to him as a religion owes to its founder." Nowhere in the whole range of music is there a collection of pieces standing on a level with the Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues. The First Part of the work (Nos. I.—XXIV.) was completed by Bach in 1722, while he was at Cöthen, and the Second Part was put together at Leipzig, a little over a score of years later, about 1742-1744.

The object of the present Analysis is to place in the hands of students a detailed and exhaustive scheme of every Prelude and Fugue. In the Preludes the mode of procedure has been:

1. To give the Figure upon which each Prelude is built;
2. To give the Prelude itself in full and copiously marked, or in a reduced form showing the structure;
3. A "Summary" of the piece; and lastly, general "Remarks" upon the structure and treatment of the materials. For the Fugues a Tabulated Analysis—bar by bar—is first given, then a "Summary" and "Remarks" as before.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

"This is a pleasing series of four gracefully-written duets for treble voices, entitled respectively 'Dawn,' 'Noon,' 'Twilight,' 'Night.' There is a complete contrast in the pieces, though brightness of treatment and lively melody characterise them all. The accompaniments most happily enforce the spirit of the several themes. The 'Dawn' opens tranquilly, but soon assumes a more joyous aspect; 'Noon' by the brook is charmingly dealt with; 'Twilight' is involved in mysterious sounds conveyed by the occasional use of diminished fifths with an admirable though daring effect; and 'Night' brings us into the midst of a fairy revel. The voice parts are cleverly, though spontaneously designed; and it is certain that those who take the trouble to study them will be glad for the knowledge and pleasure they will bring."—Musical Times.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

A SUITE OF OLD ENGLISH DANCES

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

| 1. MAYPOLE DANCE   | 3. MINUET D'AMOUR.                |
| 2. PEASANTS' DANCE | 4. OLD DANCE,with Variations. |

ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY THE COMPOSER.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encores.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898 the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renaut, Esq., for the use of the new paper on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D. Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY

(FOUNDED 1741.)

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative part-writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz. :—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1906, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1906.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

As he, the true disciple, gazes, spirit answers spirit, the glorious poem languaged in the stone breaks forth into a silent chant of life, voiceless thoughts breathed out of the fair structure pass into the gazer's soul and enter there, and there revive the memory of noble minds, that built their hearts, their blood, their all, into those walls. He holds high converse with the dead that live. All the inventive genius wakes at the thrill of a loving touch. Prayers that passed upwards from praying hearts, and as they passed upon their heavenward message were petrified in pinnacle and lofty roof, pour forth their inspiration and their faith once more. Anthems caught in mid air, rising triumphant towards the throne of God, column, and arch, one blended harmony of praise and worship, peal their great organ pipes for him whose life interprets life; and roll down all their music, from the eternal stone, the secret marvels of the old, old years, the charmed speech of ages dreaming there, there dreaming in each sculptured coign and niche, so silent yet so ready with their story. E'en thus the dumb walls speak, and the beam unlocks its secret, and the shut cabinet of spirit-knowledge ever opens to a spirit-power, that can watch, and wait, and learn.

EDWARD THRING, OF UPPINGHAM.

Westminster Abbey excepted, no church in England is richer in historical interest than Canterbury Cathedral. And who will contest its claim to architectural distinction of a very high order? One has to look back through the long vista of the centuries in order to get near the beginning of its wonderful history. It was late in the 6th century that St. Augustine landed on the shores of Kent with the object of converting the Anglo-Saxons to Christianity. Ethelbert, King of Kent, gave the famous missionary a house and a church at Canterbury. This then existing old Roman church, an edifice more or less designed on the lines of the old Basilica of St. Peter at Rome, was consecrated in the name of the Saviour. Therein St. Augustine, the first Archbishop of Canterbury, thirteen hundred years ago, carried on his ministrations and made many converts, including King Ethelbert, who, baptized by St. Augustine, became the first Christian king in England. As Dean Farrar has said: 'Since that day a Christian Church has always stood on the present site of Canterbury Cathedral; and through that cathedral and its precincts have flowed those thirteen centuries of English Christianity.' We learn from the same authority that 'the great Archbishop Theodore (d. 690) founded the first great English School, and here he placed the first organ that was ever heard in England.' The latter statement, even coming from so high an authority, seems to need confirmation or some further explanation.

The old church having been enlarged and repaired at various times—once after the Danes had sacked the building (in 1011)—served its purpose till the year 1067, when it was destroyed by fire. Lanfranc, the first Norman archbishop, entirely rebuilt the cathedral and monastery, of which only foundation work, portions of walls, and the western part of the crypt remain. The eastern limb of Lanfranc's edifice soon proved to be too small, whereupon in 1095 a new and magnificent choir was built. That dreaded enemy, fire, again wrought terrible havoc by destroying the 'glorious choir of Conrad,' as it was called, in 1174. Four years previously one of the greatest of the great events connected with this stately fane took place—the murder of Thomas à Becket. Building operations were soon commenced (in 1174, the same year as the fire) under the superintendence of William of Sens, the work being continued (1178) and a most beautiful and interesting relic of Norman work—the choir is considerably raised above the level of the nave and is approached by a flight of steps. The choir, which is the largest in England, 180 feet in length, is the earliest specimen of Transitional work. A curious and pleasing feature is the approach towards each other of the walls at the eastern end: after this contraction, the walls expand to enable the chapels of St. Anselm and St. Andrew to be brought in. Thereby the wide choir is cleverly joined to the Trinity Chapel, behind the high altar, and the corona at the easternmost part of the building. To sum up, in the words of Dean Farrar: 'The cathedral itself is one of the most uniquely beautiful in England. It exhibits the first traces of Early English style, and besides the ancient Roman work recognised by archæologists in the crypt, it contains specimens of the Præ-Norman, Norman, Transition, Early English, Decorated, Perpendicular, and modern styles. Its cloisters are described by Professor Willis as a perfect museum of Mediæval architecture.'

Of the monuments the chief interest to musicians is that of Orlando Gibbons, who died at Canterbury in 1625, whither he had gone in attendance on Charles I. to await the arrival of Henrietta Maria, the bride of that ill-fated monarch. The cause of the great musician's death is stated in the following letter written by Sir Albertus Morton, one of the Secretaries of State of Charles I., to his colleague Lord Edward Conway. This interesting communication is endorsed 'June 6, 1625. Mr. Secretarie Moreton Touchinge the musitian that dyed at Canterburie and suggested to haue the plague.' It reads thus:

MY VERY GOOD LORD,—Vnderstanding this morning yt Mr Chancellor of the Excheqr was gone to the Court, I thought it requisit to delay my departure from hence, till I might certify yor lop what the opinion of the phisitions is after opening of the head, wch is done. And they avow to all or comforts, yt there is vpon the body no token of any infection, and in the brayne most apparent signes of a lethargie. I willed them to certify their knowledge vnder their hands, the copy of wch I send heere inclosed, and the issue being so succesfull I am not sorry for the expence of one day vpon this purpose wch I beseech yor lop to present vnto his Matie.

The enclosure, endorsed 'Doctor Poe his Certificatt,' is set forth in the following terms:

Wee whose names are heere vnderwrytten: having beene called to giue or counsailes to Mr Orlando Gibbons; in the tyme of his late and suddaine sicknes, wch wee found to be in the beginning, lethargicall, or a profound sleep: out of wch, wee could neuer recouer him, neyther by inward nor outward medecines, and then instantly he fell in most strong, and sharp convulsions: wch did wring his mouth vp to his eares, and his eyes were distorted, as though they would have beene thrust out of his head and then suddenly he lost both speach, sight, and hearing, and so grew apoplecticall and lost the whole motion of euery part of his body, and so died. by William the Englishman, who had been William of Sens's chief assistant. Two hundred years later—between 1379 and 1411—the nave was rebuilt on the old Norman foundation; but it was not until nearly the end of the 15th century (in 1495) that the imposing central tower, 235 feet high, crowned the magnificent structure.

Viewed from the exterior, the massive yet graceful proportions of the Cathedral of Canterbury, its trinity of towers—the central one of which, the Angel or Bell tower, is a most beautiful piece of Gothic architecture—and the south-west porch (photograph on p. 380), are as stanzas forming a poem in stone. From the extreme west-end of the interior, its entire length, 517 feet, can be seen, because no organ intercepts the view. Owing to the loftiness of the crypt—the oldest part of the church

Here is a translation of the Latin inscription on the monument :

TO ORLANDO GIBBONS, of Cambridge, born among the muses and music ; Organist of the Royal Chapel ; emulating by the touch of his fingers the harmony of the spheres ; composer of many hymns which sound his praise no less than that of his Maker ; a man of integrity whose manner of life and sweetness of temper vied with that of his art ; being summoned to Dover to attend the nuptials of King Charles and Mary ; he died of apoplexy, and was conveyed to the Heavenly choir on Whitsun Day, A.D. 1625. Elizabeth, his wife, who bore him seven children, little able to survive such a loss, to her most deserving Husband hath, with tears, erected this monument.

His interment took place on June 6, 1625, the name being written in the burial register as 'Orlando Gibbins.' Curiously enough the next name but two in the register is 'Henrye Lawes' (July 26), and the next is 'Mr. Thomas Boyce, Esquire' (September 2), thus forming a trio of well-known names in English church music placed in close proximity in this old burial register of the cathedral.

The tomb of Edward the Black Prince is perhaps the chief feature of the cathedral from a sepulchral point of view. Clad in full armour, spurred and helmeted, as ordained by his will, the figure of the Prince goes to make this one of the most impressive of the monuments. The head rests on the helmet, and the hands are joined in the attitude of prayer. Above the canopy of the tomb—which is in the Trinity Chapel behind the high altar—is a cross-beam between two pillars from which are suspended the brazen gauntlets, the helmet, the wooden shield with its moulded leather covering, the velvet surcoat emblazoned with the arms of England and France, and the empty sheath. These relics of a 14th century warrior recall the famous battles of Crécy and Poitiers, at the former of which the Prince is said to have been accoutred in black armour, hence the title by which he is known in English history. There are many other features of surpassing interest in the cathedral which merit mention if space were not a consideration. A word must however be said in regard to the splendid Crypt, one of the largest in England, which originally supported Conrad's 'glorious choir.' Here we see the oldest part of the church and look upon a most beautiful and interesting relic of Norman work. The quaint carvings of the capitals of the pillars cannot fail to attract attention ; one of these, in St. Gabriel's Chapel, representing some music-loving animals in their enjoyment of the divine art, is portrayed in the photograph on p. 373. Since the year 1575, when the Huguenot refugees settled in Canterbury, a French service has been held in the Crypt.

The cathedral Library is most fascinating in its rich store of historical documents. This is specially instanced in Anglo-Saxon charters, of which the first is dated A.D. 742, in which Æthelbald, King of the Mercians, at the Synod of Cloveshoo, grants that 'the privilege of King Wihtrud as to the election of heads of monasteries in Kent should be observed.' A similar document, dated A.D. 949, claims on the faith of the attestation clause to be in the handwriting of St. Dunstan, Archbishop from 960-988, at whose tomb in the cathedral countless miracles are said to have been wrought. Coming to Norman times one experiences a strange feeling in handling a parchment which has been signed—though with a cross—by William the Conqueror and Matilda his Queen. This document, dated 1072, is an Act of Council, held at Windsor, establishing the supremacy of the Archbishop of Canterbury as Primate of England : it bears the autographs of Lanfranc—the first Norman Archbishop of Canterbury, he who rebuilt the cathedral—and other prelates. Another charter is that of 1363—the odour of antiquarianism is very strong in this cathedral library—in which the Black Prince grants the Manor of Faukeshall (Vauxhall), near Canterbury, as an endowment of his chantry in the crypt : and there is a charter in which King John grants protection to the prior and monks of Christ Church for their lands in Ireland ; to this is attached the seal of his Majesty.

The seals attached to the various documents here preserved make a splendid collection. They number 690 different specimens. Of these the Kings of England are represented by 141 examples, ranging from William I. to James I. ; William II. being the only absentee. The Kings of France provide five seals ; thirty archbishops—Anselm being the first and Cranmer the last—are represented by eighty-four seals, and so on, including bishops, abbeys and religious houses, abbots, priors, prioresses, clergy and laymen. Of special interest is the seal of Edward IV. to a document which continued to give permission to import from France an annual allowance of a hundred modii of wine originally sent in 1179 by Louis VII., King of France, as a propitiatory offering of that monarch to St. Thomas à Becket ; this beverage was doubtless much enjoyed by the priests. It should be added that many of the clerical seals are impressed by antique gems, as are several of the counter-seals of the archbishop and bishops.*

Ecclesiologists would be interested in the vestments of Hubert Walter, archbishop from 1193 to 1205, to whom succeeded the great and good Stephen Langton, the first to divide the Bible into chapters. Archbishop Langton, who won for the Church her freedom (Magna Charta), is curiously buried through one of the walls of the Warriors' Chapel, half inside and half outside the cathedral. The bibliophile will also find much to his taste within the walls of the Library. There is a Sarum Missal of 1553 and a Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549), in addition to the following North aisle of the choir there is a chained copy of the second Bishops' Bible (1572).

Two specimens of 15th century poetry are here preserved among the manuscripts. They are in the form of two songs written by monks of Canterbury. The first begins:

I pray you come kyss me
My lytle prety mopse
I pray come kyss me.

The following verses show that this invitation was at first declined but afterwards accepted, and that the incident ended happily the last verse testifies:

I know so well that ye are kynd
Wherefore ye shall now know my mynde
And as you owne ye shall me fynde
At all times redy to kyss thee.

The other poetical fancy of some old monk is also of an amorous nature. It starts with the declaration :

I will not flee
To love that hart that loveth me and ends :

Farwell of harts ye hart most fyne,
Farwell dere hart hartly to the,
And kepe yis hart of meyne for thyne,
As hart for hart for lovyng me.

To give even a short list of names clerically and historically associated with Canterbury Cathedral is beyond the scope of this article. Some of the archbishops have been named. To these may be added Theodore (7th century), who originated posthumous sermons were sold for 2,500 guineas, an enormous sum, especially taking into consideration the difference in the value of money at that time (1695) compared with our own day ; while, coming to recent years, there are the honoured names of Tait, Benson, and Temple.

Of Deans, the best known are Henry Alford,—author of the hymns ‘Come, ye thankful people, come,’ ‘Forward be our watchword,’ and others—Robert Payne Smith and Frederic William Farrar. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, as a former canon of the cathedral and author of ‘Memorials of Canterbury,’ must be mentioned. Kings and queens galore have visited the noble structure, as indeed did a king of music, Mozart, who on his return to the continent after his visit to London in 1764-5, broke his journey at Canterbury. Assuming that the youthful musician—he was then nine years old—heard a service, one wonders what the little fellow thought of ‘Rogers in D,’ or some such service typical of the cathedral music then in vogue !

This Mozartian episode naturally leads us to matters musical, with first a reference to the Bells. From a very interesting book ‘The lives of the Deans of Canterbury,’ by Mr. J. M. Cowper, a learned and trustworthy antiquary and historian of the city, we learn that in 1726 the various bells of the cathedral were ordered to be re-cast. An entry in the Chapter Minute Book of August 3, 1726, reads :

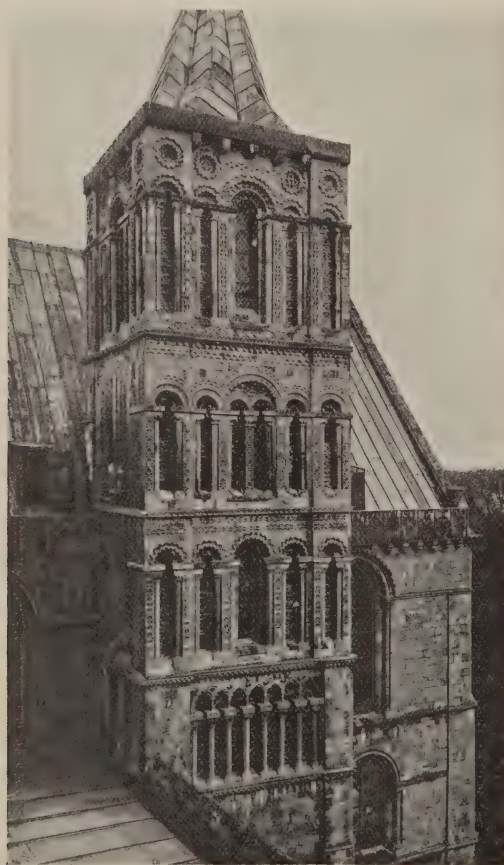

Agreed that a new ring of eight bells be made out of the six bells in Arundel Steeple, saying that the treble bell of the Arundel Steeple ring shall be removed up into the place of Bell-Harry, and that Bell-Harry shall be cast into the new ring ; the Tenor of which new ring is to be E la mi-Flat, or D Sol re pitch.

Samuel Knight was the bell founder entrusted with the work, the cost of the octet of bells being £60. The Arundel steeple was the north-west tower, and ‘Bell Harry,’ the present bell of that name hanging in the central tower, was cast by Joseph Hatch in 1635.

Mr. Cowper’s book just referred to furnishes us with some interesting side-lights on the musical doings—in some cases mis-doings—of long ago. Contrast the cathedral clergy of the present day with their predecessors of the year 1560, when ‘a presentment was made in which it was asserted that amongst other things [!], there was drunkenness among some of the Petty Canons, railing and jesting, with great disobedience.’ Matters do not seem to have greatly improved even twenty years later, as the Chapter records state that ‘complaint having been made that the Petty Canons and Lay Clerks, in spite of warning, still neglected to attend according to their duty, it was resolved :

That if any petty canon or lay clerk fail to be present in the choir at the beginning of the three daily services, except in their weeks of liberty, that every of them so making default shall, the next service after, stand at the door of the grate in the choir in his surplice during the time of the whole service.

It is to be hoped that this stand-in-the-corner, surplice-clad, naughty-boy sort of punishment had its proper effect on the delinquents. In course of the diocesan division of England ; and if he did not actually introduce the parochial system, he was responsible for the development of that idea ; Cuthbert (d. 758), the first archbishop buried in the cathedral, said to have instigated the saying of the Lord’s Prayer and the Creed in the vulgar tongue ; Henry Chichele, or Chicheley (1414), founder of All Souls’ College, Oxford ; Thomas Cranmer (1533), the first Protestant archbishop ; Matthew Parker (1559), in whose versification of the Psalter first appeared the familiar ‘Tallis Canon’ tune by Tallis, inseparably associated with Bishop Ken’s Evening Hymn ; William Laud ; John Tillotson, one of the most famous of preachers, whose time the conduct of the singing-men seems to have improved, as in 1597 Dean Rogers in his will 'made bequests to choirmen, vesturers, vergerers, bell-ringers, and others.' No less pleasant is it to read that in 1567 'a reward was given to Mr. Selby, master of the choir school, in consideration for the pains he had taken in making and pricking divers books of music for the choir'; and in 1583 'the Vice Dean and Treasurer were instructed to see that the choir was furnished with song books, and to reward such members of the choir as took pains therein.'

In the year 1561 the Chapter granted 'the sum of £3 6. 8. to the Master and Usher of the School towards the expenses to be incurred in setting forth tragedies, comedies, and interludes.' This payment was to the cathedral (not choir) school, now the King's School, and from these performances probably sprang the Speech Day ceremonies which Christopher Marlowe (the son of a Canterbury shoemaker) witnessed; he also took part in the plays on those occasions. Former choristers of the cathedral who subsequently became known to fame were Dr. Stephen Elvey, organist of New College, Oxford, and his brother, Sir George Elvey, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The last-named used to say that during his choristership (circa 1825) there was an old woman about Canterbury whom the choristers named 'Ma'm Godly-books,' because if anyone appeared in the cathedral without a book she immediately supplied the deficiency. Once when a man peeped in during service-time, the old lady said to him: 'Come in, there's plenty of room,' an absolute truism, as, with the exception of the clergy and choir, she was almost the only person in the vast building.

William Shrubsole, composer of the tune 'Miles's Lane,' and Mr. John B. Lott, the present organist of Lichfield Cathedral, were former choristers, as were two organists of Canterbury Cathedral, Thomas Evance Jones and William Henry Longhurst. Mr. Lott was a former assistant-organist and so was Mr. H. A. Fricker, organist of Leeds Town Hall; the present assistant-organist is

Mr. W. T. Harvey. The Rev. F. J. O. Helmore, son of the well-known Rev. Thomas Helmore, has held the office of Precentor since 1883, his long connection with the cathedral having commenced in 1878 upon his appointment to a minor canonry. The present choristers are educated by the Dean and Chapter in an ancient building formerly part of the brew-house of olden times.

In regard to organ matters, if Archbishop

Theodore who died in A.D. 690 really 'placed in Canterbury Cathedral the first organ that was ever heard in England,' we have a very early date for the use of the organ in the services of the church. It would be interesting to see a specification of this 7th century organ and still more interesting to hear the sounds which this instrument was capable of producing. We must reluctantly skip a period of nearly 900 years before we find the next reference to an organ. In 1573 the Queen's organ maker was sent for 'to examine and repair the great organs of the cathedral.' This Queen's organ maker was doubtless Thomas Dallam, whom Queen Elizabeth sent to the Sultan of Turkey with the present of an organ.* In the following year (1574) it was ordered—by the Dean and Chapter, of course—'that, for the better exercise of the master and choristers, a set of viols and a set of lutes should be prepared at the Church's charge.' The 'organ-maker' was again on the scene in 1578 when he was 'engaged to attend the cathedral to the choir screen under the central tower. We have said 'a fresh though not entirely new instrument,' and so it was. In the summer of that year (1784) the Handel Commemoration Festival was held in Westminster Abbey, for which an organ was specially erected at the west end of the building. This instrument—which had a long tracker action to enable the conductor, Mr. Joah Bates, to play it—was subsequently removed to Canterbury Cathedral and, as already stated, placed on the screen. From the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins's MS. organ specification book, written throughout in his own hand, and now in the possession of the present writer, we find that the scheme of that organ, built by Samuel Green, is given as follows:

twice a year to see to the organs and repair them.' During the decanate of John Tillotson (1672-89) Mr. Smythe was paid the sum of £380 'to repair the great and small organs'; and in 1752 the Chapter agreed 'to pay Richard Bridge for repairing and rebuilding the organ' the sum of £480.

Previous to the year 1784 the organ was located on the north side of the choir above the cantoris stalls. With the advent of a fresh though not entirely new instrument, its position was changed

A very interesting and, we think, practically unknown account of the opening of this Green organ appeared in the Gentlemen's Magazine of July, 1784, p. 553, which we give in full:

July 8.

The new organ, built by Mr. Samuel Green, and which figured at Handel's jubilee, was opened at Canterbury by Dr. Hayes, professor of music at Oxford.

The placing of it over the stalls at the entrance to the choir (instead of the north side) has produced that happy effect so long wished by every admirer of that ancient and magnificent structure. The ornamental parts of the case and loft, all in true Gothic taste, surmounted with spires, embellished with pointed arches, and occupying almost the whole of the grand arch under Bell Harry Steeple, gave satisfaction, on the first view, to every eye; but, when the musical powers of the instrument were displayed, the auditors, who, it is supposed, were about 2,000, were struck with astonishment, as well by its superior excellence, as the known and acknowledged abilities of the performer.

In the morning service were introduced the Te Deum and Jubilate of Messieurs Hall and Hine, and a Thanksgiving Anthem (Psalm cvi.), composed by Mr. Henry Purcell. And a Sermon suitable to the occasion (which we hope will appear in print), was preached by the Reverend the Dean (Dr. Horne), from Psalm lvi. 8: Awake up, my glory, awake, lute and harp (the motto of the organ); in which he gave an historical deduction of sacred music from the earliest times, exemplified by scripture; observed, that organs were mentioned in the fourth century (by Julian, we suppose), and were first introduced into churches in the seventh; elegantly panegyrised those great masters, Purcell, Blow, Greene, and Handel, whom he justly styled "the classics of that art"; appositely introduced the late jubilee at Westminster, &c. Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur by (the late) Dr. William Hayes, and a Thanksgiving Anthem (Psalm xxxiii.) by Dr. Philip Hayes, made part of the evening service, with several voluntaries, to shew the various stops and powers of that noble piece of mechanism, which has (it is said) 2,500 pipes.

The Very Rev. Dr. Horne, who preached the sermon on that auspicious occasion, did not belie his name, as he was a very musical Dean.

THE ORGAN CONSOLE, ABOVE THE CHOIR STALLS.

This organ remained on the screen only for forty-seven years, until 1827, when it was removed out of sight to the south triforium by James Longhurst (father of the late Dr. W. H. Longhurst), who planned and executed the long tracker action of eighty feet! In the meantime, in 1825 or 1826, James Longhurst had added seven 16 ft. pedal pipes to Green's pedalless instrument; these 'German pedals' (so called) were the first of their kind introduced into Kent. Mr. Highmore Skeats, the then organist, had a peculiar aversion to this new-fangled septet of pedal pipes, and when anyone asked to hear them, Highmore would say to his pupil, Mr. Jones: 'Here, Jones, come and show these things off, I have never learned to dance.' When the pipes were made Master Longhurst, then a small boy of six or seven, was made to crawl into the largest of them (lying horizontally) and therein to sing a song! There is no need to give detailed particulars of the changes which the organ underwent during the following sixty years, except that it seems very remarkable that the system of equal temperament tuning was not adopted at Canterbury until the year 1873.

The present organ was built in 1886 by the late Henry Willis, some parts of Green's instrument erected in 1784 being incorporated therein. Six of the pedal stops contained in the original specification had, however, to be left out through lack of funds. Five of these have been recently added by Messrs. Norman & Beard, viz., Open diapason (32 ft.), Violone (16 ft.), Violoncello (8 ft.), Bass flute (8 ft.), Clarion (8 ft.), and funds only are needed to insert the 16 ft. metal open Diapason; then this fine instrument will be complete. The following is its specification:

Electric action throughout. The organ pipes are placed in the Triforium and therefore are practically invisible: the console is placed in the south choir aisle and raised above the stalls.

Wind is supplied to the organ by a Kinetic blower, propelled by a 10-h.p. Bull electric motor, both placed in a specially-constructed chamber in the roof of the Triforium and controlled by the organist from the console.

As at other cathedrals in olden times the organist was not a recognized official as such, so at Canterbury. Mr. Cowper says that, so far as he can ascertain, the office of master of the choristers was combined with that of organist from 1541 to 1634. One William Selbye, who was master of the choristers from about 1541 to (certainly) 1567, was paid in 1550 as master and pulsator of the organ. Passing over Thomas Bull, Arthur Cocke and George Juxon—all three of them 16th century masters of the choristers—we come to a more distinguished name, George Marson, who held the mastership from 1599 to 1624, if not later. That he was also organist is proved by the entry of his burial in the cathedral registers, printed by the Harleian Society, which reads thus :

1631. Feb 5. George Marson, once one of ye Peticanons of this church, Master of the Choristers, and Organist alsoe of this Church.

But Mr. George Marson acquired fame beyond the precincts of Canterbury. He took the degree of Mus. Bac. in 1601 at Cambridge, according to Anthony à Wood, who also says, on the authority of Dr. Rogers, that he (Marson) was 'of kin to Dr. Giles.' But what is of greater interest is the fact that Marson composed one of the madrigals forming 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' his contribution to that famous compilation being a setting of 'The nymphs and shepheards.' Other compositions by one Marson—most probably the Canterbury organist—are contained in the library of the Royal College of Music, where they form part of the large collection apparently made by the Rev. John Barnard for his 'Selected Church Musick.' These Marson compositions (all in MS.) are catalogued as follows :

There appear to have been two organists at Canterbury in 1634, the first year in which the office is definitely mentioned. One of these—a new name discovered by Mr. Cowper not long ago—was Valentine Röther, 'organist in ye Queere,' the other organist was Francis Plomer, 'Organist in the Sermon House'—i.e., the Chapter House, where services were evidently held. It seems that at the Restoration, Mr. Plomer was dismissed with a solatium of one pound sterling. To Valentine Röther succeeded (in 1640) Thomas Tonstall, a patronymic that frequently occurs in the registers. To Thomas Gibbs, organist at the Restoration, succeeded Richard Chomley, who, in due time, said that 'by reason of age and other infirmities' he was willing to surrender his place and to remove to London or elsewhere. Thereupon the Dean and Chapter paid him his 'next quarter's wages,' bestowed upon him the sum of ten pounds towards his expenses of removing, and allowed him a pension of twenty-five shillings a year, payable quarterly! At that time the salary was forty pounds.

For details concerning other 17th and 18th century organists the reader is referred to Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists, past and present'; mention may, however, be made of a curious condition attached to the appointment (in December, 1698) of a probationer organist, viz., 'that whoever should be chosen should take upon him to teach not more than ten King's Scholars to sing "Tallis his service."' Messrs. Highmore Skeats and Jones—who have been already referred to—and Dr. W. H. Longhurst held office in succession for the long period of ninety-five years. The last named, as chorister, lay-clerk, assistant-organist, and organist, took part in the services for nearly three-quarters of a century. A brass tablet, placed upon the case of the organ console, to commemorate his length of service, bears the following inscription :

In Memory of WILLIAM H. LONGHURST, Mus. Doc., Organist, who for 71 years (1827—1898) was connected with the services and music of this Cathedral, this Tablet was erected and additions to the organ were made by his many admirers and friends.

Dr. Harry Crane Perrin, the present organist, was born at Wellingborough, August 19, 1865.

After studying under the late Sir Robert Stewart he took the degree of Mus. Bac. at Dublin in 1890. His organ appointments have been St. Columba's College, Rathfarnham; St. John's Church, Lowestoft; and St. Michael's Church, Coventry, where he conducted the local choral society and was choir inspector and conductor for the Archdeaconry. In 1898 Dr. Perrin—who took his doctor's degree at Dublin in 1901—was appointed organist and master of the choristers of Canterbury Cathedral in succession to Dr. W. H. Longhurst. He conducts the Cathedral Musical Society, which three times a year gives oratorio performances, with full orchestral accompaniment, in the nave of the cathedral with much acceptance. The works that have been performed on these occasions include: Messiah, Samson, Judas Maccabæus, St. Paul, Elijah, Hymn of Praise, Redemption, Mors et Vita, Last Judgment, Stabat Mater (Dvorák), and Requiem (Brahms), in addition to symphonies by various masters.

As a composer Dr. Perrin can point to 'The abode of worship,' cantata for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra; 'Song of War,' choral ballad for chorus and orchestra; Te Deum and Benedictus in E flat; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D; anthems, chants, hymn-tunes, &c.

For valued help in the preparation of this article the writer is indebted to the writings of Mr. J. M. Cowper; to the Rev. G. C. E. Ryley, M.A., Mus.B., minor canon of the cathedral; to Dr. H. C. Perrin, organist and master of the choristers; and to the Curators of the Schools, Oxford, for permission to insert (as an extra supplement) the portrait of Orlando Gibbons in the Music School Collection, Oxford, the reproduction being from Mr. Myles B. Foster's 'Anthems and Anthem Composers.'

PRIVATE MUSICAL COLLECTIONS.

I. MR. EDWARD SPEYER.

Mr. Speyer naturally prizes the original autograph of the D minor trio, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 63), composed by Robert Schumann (1810-56). This precious possession, which contains numerous corrections, is dated as follows:

End of the first movement	- - -	August 20,	} 1847.
„ slow	„ - - -	August 31,
„ last	„ - - -	Dresden, September 7,

In a letter to Ferdinand Hiller, written at that time, Schumann says: 'I have finished a trio lately, a good deal of which I like very much. When you come again you shall hear it, together with one I composed in former years [Phantasiestücke, Op. 88], and one of Clara's besides.' Here are also the autographs of six of Schumann's songs:

Mein Garten	- - - - -	Op. 77, No. 2.
Des Knaben Berglied	- - - - -	} from Op. 79.
Vom Schlaraffenland	- - - - -
Kommen und Scheiden	- - - - -	Op. 90, No. 3.
Die Sennin	- - - - -	Op. 90, No. 4.
Lied der Mignon: 'Heiss' mich nicht reden'	- - - - -	Op. 98a, No. 5.

On the back of the Mignon song is the first sketch of the C major symphony. There are also three letters of Schumann's, two written to Spohr, and one to Mr. Speyer, senr. Schumann addresses Spohr as 'Highly honoured Sir and Master.'

Schumann's circle included J. O. Grimm (1827-1903), Theodor Kirchner (1824-1903), and Jean J. H. Verhulst (1816-90). There are letters in the collection written by all three musicians, who, together with Brahms and Joachim, figured largely in Schumann's life. To the foregoing quintet must be added Mendelssohn's favourite pupil Hubert Ferdinand Kufferath (1818-96), who is represented by a fugue for organ. His son, Maurice Kufferath, is well known as a clever writer on music and the director of the Théâtre de la Monnaie, the Brussels Opera.

Autographs of Heinrich Schütz (1585-1672) are very rare, therefore a special interest is attached to a petition of the distinguished 17th century composer to the Town Council of Görlitz, and dated 'Dresden, Dec. 8, 1647.' A group of five autographs of Spohr (1784-1859) must next claim attention: (1) Quatuor Brillant in B minor for strings (Op. 61), dedicated to Mr. Speyer's father; (2) the last music he ever wrote, the sketch for a Requiem, which he (Spohr) commenced 'as a last attempt to write something good before his death; he began the composition with zeal and enjoyment, but soon had to put down his pen, painfully conscious of his declining powers'; (3) manuscript from the Violin School; (4) a Canon written in 1819, which has been ingeniously deciphered by Mr. D. F. Tovey; and (5) a sketch of a Duetto for pianoforte and violin (Op. 127). Moreover, there are no fewer than 194 letters from Spohr to Mr. Speyer, senr.—including those written from London in 1820 during the composer's first visit to England, which are of the greatest interest and importance. The mention of Spohr suggests a reference to his attached and lifelong friend Wilhelm Speyer (1790-1878), Mr. Speyer's father, a gifted creative musician who became a merchant at Frankfurt, and whose letters to Spohr, ranging from 1820 to 1857, are also included in the collection. This correspondence between two contemporary musicians affords a curious, valuable and highly interesting insight into the musical history of the earlier part of the 19th century. Wilhelm Speyer is best known as a composer of vocal music, many of his songs having attained great popularity—e.g., 'The Trumpeter,' 'Rheinsehnsucht' (My heart's on the Rhine), 'Die drei Liebchen,' &c. His first published composition, a book of Violin Duets, bore the name 'Speier' on the title-page, and when the young composer, then in his seventeenth year, pointed out the error, old Simrock, the publisher, told him that he ought to think himself very lucky to get his songs published, without being too particular as to the spelling of his name. The name, so misspelt, became ever afterwards the composer's nom de plume.

The opera 'Fernand Cortez'—produced on November 28, 1809—furnished a connecting link between its composer Spontini (1774-1851) and the great Napoleon. Here is a letter from the composer to the great man, in which he refers to Napoleon having deigned to signify his satisfaction of Spontini's service by honourable tokens of good will. In this communication he mentions the gift of a prize Napoleon had founded, to be given every ten years for the new opera which should have made the greatest success within that period: in this instance the award had been made to Spontini. Napoleon took a warm interest in the production of 'Fernand Cortez'—at the first performance of which he was present—from an idea that it might influence public opinion in favour of his plans for the Spanish war, then in progress. There is also a letter to Spohr, and a page of music from the score of Spontini's opera 'Agnes von Hohenstaufen,' dated 'July 7, 1837.' The letter 'S' further includes a fugue by Maximilian Stadler (1748-1833), the friend of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven; two songs composed by the singer Joseph Staudigl (1807-61), who created the title-rôle in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah'; songs and letters penned by Julius Stockhausen (born 1826), eminent as a singer and teacher of the vocal art; a large number of letters written by Richard Strauss (born 1864), in addition to sketches for 'Feuersnot' (Kunrad's monologue), which the composer has endorsed 'for the collection.' Johann Strauss (1825-1899), the Waltz King and composer of the 'Blue Danube,' is represented by some sketches of his operetta 'Der Zigeunerbaron.'

The handwriting of Tausig (1841-71) is shown in a letter, and that of Telemann (1681-1767), the predecessor of J. S. Bach, by a list of fees paid to the musicians engaged at the Thanksgiving Festival in honour of the election of the German Emperor at Hamburg in 1742. Here is the manuscript of a 'Polacca' in commemoration of a smoking matinée, in the handwriting of Thalberg (1812-71), dated 'January 11, 1841,' and the letter 'T' may be concluded with Ambroise Thomas (1811-96) in a letter (Feb. 19, 1894) written to the Minister of the Interior at Brussels, in which the composer of 'Mignon' returns his thanks for the Commandership of the Order of Leopold which had been conferred upon him. Written from Busseto, and dated 'Sept. 20, 1833,' is a letter penned by Verdi (1813-1901); and among the other 'V's' are specimens of the handwriting of Vieuxtemps (1820-81)—the manuscript of 'Voix intimes,' a piece for violin and pianoforte; Viotti (1753-1824), a letter dated 'Paris, Aug. 16, 1821'; and the Abbé Vogler (1749-1814), the teacher of Weber and Meyerbeer, a letter dated 'Copenhagen, Nov. 15, 1799.'

The Wagner autographs are very interesting, relating, as they do, to 'Lohengrin' and 'Götterdämmerung.' Of the earlier opera there are sketches of the 'Leavetaking Scene,' Act III., 3rd Scene, Elsa's appeal: 'Mein Gatte! Nein! ich lass' dich nicht von hinnen!' with the chorus and orchestral parts; further, of Elsa's part in the great love duet, Act III., 2nd Scene: 'Als ich nun wachend.' On the back of the page figure two fragments entitled respectively 'Sinfonie' and 'Adagio,' which, however, have no relation to the two existing Symphonies of Wagner. From the 'Götterdämmerung' there are those verses from Brünnhilde's closing scene in Wagner's handwriting which, for the reasons given in the 'Gesammelte Schriften' (VI. pp. 361-363), have not been set to music. There are, further, two letters of Wagner dated respectively Zurich, August 10, 1851, and Munich, March 11, 1867.

The visit to England of Carl Maria von Weber (1786-1826) and his death in London during his sojourn in this country are among the most pathetic things in music. For the benefit-concert he gave at the Argyll Rooms, Regent Street, on May 21, 1826—which proved an utter failure from a pecuniary point of view—Weber composed a song, 'From Chindara's warbling fount' (from Moore's 'Lalla Rookh'), sung by Miss ('Kitty') Stephens, afterwards the Countess of Essex. It was the last time he touched the keyboard in accompanying this his last composition. The autograph is in Mr. Speyer's collection. Weber has only written down the voice part and one ritornello; the accompaniment was afterwards added by Moscheles. Besides this 'swan-song' Mr. Speyer possesses the wonderfully neatly written autograph of another song, 'Das Veilchen im Thale,' of an earlier date and composed to words of Friedrich Kind, the author of the libretto of 'Der Freischütz.' Here is a letter of Weber's, dated 'Dresden, February 6, 1826,' concerning his only visit to London. Its English is surprisingly good for one who had never been in this country, and who had only lately begun at home to study the language. Weber says:

MY DEAR SIR,

I leave Dresden the 16. February. I shall sleep every night, because I am forbidden to travel by night,—remain one day at Frankfort, and hope to arrive at Paris the 25th February. There I must remain some days, and therefore I can not be in London—embarking at Calais—before the 6th or 7th of March. Consequently I can only accept the fair offer of our honored friend Mr. Kemble than for the four last Oratorios, the 8th, 10th, 15th and 17th, for which I hope Mr. Kemble will accord me the round sum of one hundred Pounds Sterling.

Beyond all this however I must entirely apply to your goodness, without that I would be a very helpless Being. But you prove yet already by your kind letter and the very useful advices which you give me in it—for which I cannot be enough indebted to you—that I can hope every aid by your friendship. Your letter shall be my direction after which I regulate myself; and Mrs. Weber is a great deal more tranquil to see me in such hands in England, and looks upon it with harty thanks. I am not attended by a servant, but Mr. Fürstenau will come along with me, and I am very glad he can reside near me.

And now, my dear Sir, I give you a harty shake hands and remain with all regards and esteem,

Yours most faithfully,

C. M. V. WEBER.

An earlier letter, written when he was only twenty-one years of age, of the composer of 'Der Freischütz' is a specially interesting one. It is dated 'Stuttgart, Aug. 9, 1807,' and is addressed to the Director of the Court Opera in that city. In it the young composer, then only twenty-one, asks to have the honour of playing on the pianoforte before the King of Württemberg, or of giving a concert under the auspices of the Theatre management. He says: 'I would not only play on the pianoforte a sonata of Beethoven's, or a work of some other great master, but I would also conduct a symphony of my own composition, or an overture of one of my operas. Without any self-conceit, I would indeed be happy to gain the favour of his Majesty and the applause of the connoisseurs of this place.' Joseph Weigl (1766-1846), the contemporary of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, and known by all these giants in music, finds a place in Mr. Speyer's collection by his portrait, on which the air 'Pria che l'impegno' (from the opera 'Amor Marino'), is written, which Beethoven rescued from oblivion by taking it as the theme for the Finale of his Clarinet trio, Op. 11.

The criticism of the concert speaks for itself, especially in the castigation given by J. W. D. to Grismrtasgroee.

The postponed performance of Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Apostles' at Düsseldorf took place on May 10, and was a great success in every way. The Cologne Gazette refers to the event as follows:

Not till now, at the last concert of the Musikverein, which had to be postponed in consequence of Prof. Buths's illness, did the Apostles proclaim their teaching in Düsseldorf, and with the warmest success. . . .

Elgar has prepared an extremely variegated palette for his subject; he loves to introduce realistic light effects and extraneous insertions from all points of the compass of Palestine into his mystic background. His work acquires thereby a certain degree of heterogeneity. We need only recall the famous 'Silver pieces' of Judas Iscariot. The musical outlines are almost too sharply defined on the one side, whereas in the places which are wrapt in a mystic semi-darkness they seem to dissolve. But in the work as a whole we meet with an artistic individuality which speaks its own language. It is necessary to know Elgar's development so far, if we wish to understand that this individuality is the link which unites the many heterogeneous details and gives that to the work which we miss at a first casual hearing: a homogeneous style. A further trait which estranges us at first is felt as a beautiful inheritance of olden days by the listener who is initiated in the growth of our art: the employment of the old church tones. Thus the employment of the Phrygian mode (minor with diminished second and diminished seventh) seems to recall lamentations dating from old, old times. The performance under Buths was inspired by the most intimate appreciation of the peculiar beauties of the work; the spirit of devout but deep rooted and at the same time somewhat brooding Catholicism, as Elgar understands it, was over the performance. . . . The production as a whole formed an event, and brought the season of the Musikverein to a dignified conclusion.

The Athenæum of April 14 (with a reference to Le Ménestrel of April 8) called attention to two pièces d'occasion composed by Wagner and Mendelssohn respectively sixty-three years ago. This pair of compositions owed their existence to the unveiling of a statue to Friedrich August I., King of Saxony, at Dresden, on June 7, 1843. The contribution of Wagner—then Kapellmeister at the Saxon capital—to the ceremony was a 'Weihegruss (an einen grossen Deutschen),' a setting of a poem written for the occasion by Otto Hohlfeld for male voices in four-part unaccompanied chorus, and sung by 250 picked voices from the Dresden choral societies. By-the-way, this composition has only recently been published by Messrs. Bote & Bock, of Berlin. In a letter to Cécilie Avenarius, his half-sister, describing the ceremony, 'Wagner refers with satisfaction to the circumstance that there had only been one opinion' (we quote from Mr. Ashton Ellis's 'Life of Wagner,' ii., 26), 'namely, that his simple heartfelt composition had entirely eclipsed the complex artificialities of Mendelssohn.'

What is this composition of Mendelssohn's, containing (pace Wagner) 'complex artificialities'? Le Ménestrel says that there is no trace of it. But we have traced it! And we have done so through the manuscript Thematic catalogue of Mendelssohn's compositions, published and unpublished, which formerly belonged to Sir George Grove; moreover, through the courtesy of Dr. Albert Kopfermann, Custos of the Royal Library at Berlin (where Mendelssohn's manuscripts are preserved), we have before us a transcript of the full-score. Like that of Wagner, Mendelssohn's piece is a setting for male voices of a poem beginning 'Seht, die Hülle ist gefallen,' but with accompaniments for brass instruments. Prompted perhaps by the success which attended the laying out of his Festgesang at the Gutenberg Festival of 1840, at Leipzig—for which he composed the 'Hymn of Praise'—Mendelssohn cast his Dresden piece in the same mould, two choirs of male voices (tenors and basses) in unison, each accompanied by a band of instrumentalists. The 'Chor der Snger' (or first choir) were accompanied by four trumpets, four horns, three trombones and ophicleides, while the 'Chor des Volkes' (or second choir, as representing the people) were accompanied by two horns and three trombones, except in the first fourteen bars, when all the instruments (less the first and second trumpets) supported the folk-song tune. The composition began with the said folk-song, i.e., the Saxon National Anthem, which of course is identical with our 'God save the King.' This was given out by the 'Chor des Volkes' with the strenuous accompaniment as already mentioned. Then immediately followed Mendelssohn's own music, at bar three of which the 'God save the King' tune was again started by the second choir and continued simultaneously with the newly composed strains. After six bars rest the second choir began the second half of the National Hymn, the other singers having continued and still going on with their vocalizations, at the end of which the whole of the music (except the introductory fourteen bars) was twice repeated for the three verses of the poem. At the fourth and last verse Mendelssohn made a codaic change in his music of which the following example—an outline of the score—may serve to show the 'complex artificialities' with which Wagner charged him :

CHOR DER SNGER. Tenors and Basses in Unison.

The musical score is presented in three systems. The first system shows the vocal line for the 'CHOR DER SNGER' (Tenors and Basses in Unison) and the orchestral accompaniment ('Orch.') in 2/4 time. The second system introduces the 'CHOR DES VOLKES' (Tenors and Basses in Unison) and continues the orchestral accompaniment. The third system shows further vocal and orchestral entries. Dynamics such as sf (sforzando) are indicated at various points in the orchestral parts.

The two choirs appear to have been separated from each other, and the autograph—which is ninety-four bars long—is dated 'Leipzig, June 2, 1843.' Curiously enough there is no reference whatever in all the Mendelssohn literature to this composition. Even Sir George Grove does not mention it in his biography of the composer in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' though in the new edition of that work it may be assumed that so interesting a collaboration with Wagner, so to speak, will be duly recorded.

The recent performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony by the Philharmonic Society, for which that stupendous work was expressly composed, may serve to recall previous renderings of 'No. 9' under the same auspices. We give a complete list of the performances, up-to-date, in tabulated form :

Sixteen times in all. At the concert of July 10, 1843—a 'Command concert,' at which Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort were present—the Scherzo and Choral portion only were performed, conducted by Spohr. For the performance in 1837 Moscheles wrote an organ part as an additional accompaniment to the Choral section.

Sir Charles Stanford, in the April issue of the Monthly Journal of the International Musical Society, calls attention to two points in the interpretation of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The first refers to the absurd break-neck speed which some conductors adopt in the Trio section of the Scherzo, whereby Beethoven's intentions are entirely set at naught. This matter was, however, threshed out by Sir George Grove, with his wonted enthusiasm, at the meeting of the Musical Association of February 12, 1895. On that occasion Sir George was in error in stating that the first edition of the work contained the metronomic direction  $\text{♩} = 116$  as applied to the Presto in question, because, as a matter of fact, the first edition—a copy of which is before us—contains no metronomizings at all! Later on the indication  $\text{♩} = 116$  was stamped into the plate, which was duly printed from. It was the unfortunate and doubtless accidental—not wilful—omission of the stem from the body of the note in the subsequent octavo edition that caused the motor-car speed, so to speak.

There can be no doubt about the minim as against the semibreve sign, as Beethoven in a dictated letter written by Schindler to Ignatz Moscheles expressly says so. This letter, dictated by Beethoven from his death-bed only eight days before he drew his last breath, and signed by him, is now in the possession of Mr. Felix Moscheles, who very kindly allowed us to see it in view of this 'Occasional Note.' We give the letter in a translated form :

'Vienna, 18th March, 1827.

'MY DEAR GOOD MOSCHELES—The feelings with which I read your letter of the 1st of March,

I cannot describe in words. The splendid generosity of the Philharmonic Society, which well nigh anticipated my request, has moved me to my inmost soul. I entreat you, therefore, dear Moscheles, to be my spokesman and communicate to the Philharmonic Society, my earnest, heartfelt thanks for the sympathy and assistance they have rendered me. I was compelled at once to call in the whole sum of 1000 florins, as I was just reduced to the painful necessity of being obliged to borrow money, and thus becoming further involved. With regard to the concert, which the Philharmonic Society have determined to give for my benefit, let me beg of them not to abandon their generous project, but to deduct from the gross receipts of that concert, the 1000 florins now presented to me in advance. Should the Society kindly allow me the surplus, I undertake to prove my deep gratitude, either by writing for them a new symphony, the sketch of which already lies in my desk, or a new overture, or something else that the Society may wish for. May Heaven only soon restore me to health, and I will prove to the noble-hearted English how highly I appreciate their sympathy with my sad fate. I shall never forget your noble conduct, and hope soon to send a special letter of thanks to Sir Smart and to Herr Stumpff. Farewell, with sentiments of true friendship, I remain, with the greatest esteem,

'Your friend,

'LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN.

'P.S.—My hearty greeting to your wife. I have to thank the Philharmonic Society and you for a new friend in Herr Rau. Pray give to the Philharmonic Society the symphony marked by me with the metronome tempi; these I enclose.'

The reference in the above communication to 'the splendid generosity of the Philharmonic Society' is to the gift of £100 which the Society sent through Moscheles to the great composer in his last illness. At the special general meeting called for this purpose it was unanimously resolved: 'That the sum of one hundred pounds be sent, through the hands of Mr. Moscheles, to some confidential friend of Beethoven, to be applied to his comforts and necessities during his illness.'

Sir Charles Stanford's other point is new and important. Everyone knows that wonderful tune in the Finale of the symphony given out by the violoncellos and double-basses, and the charm of its repetition (at bar 25) by the violas and violoncellos in unison in the upper octave, with the no less captivating counter-subject in the first bassoon. According to the score the second bassoon is silent, but Beethoven has indicated by abbreviation signs in his autograph (preserved at the Royal Library, Berlin) that it was to be played in octaves with the double-basses, thus filling up the wide gap between the latter and the violoncellos. Gevaert and other writers on Instrumentation have drawn attention to this peculiar scoring of Beethoven, in that he left the double-basses without their octave covering, an error which will need correction in any text-books whose authors have worked in the dark in regard to this feature in a great masterpiece.

Herr Otto Fiebach of Königsberg is bold enough to believe that it is possible to return from the licentious extravagances of so much modern music to a style in which the strictest regard for the rules of form, harmony and counterpoint shall be allied to 'plastic' melody and 'modern' harmony and means of expression generally. Thus he hopes to inaugurate a 'musical renaissance.' This is no more than some of our own best composers believe and act upon, and a musical renaissance is no new idea; but to prove his faith in his idea Herr Fiebach has written what he styles a Madrigalhymnus 'Die neun Musen' (The nine muses), which was produced on May 3 with considerable success. Whatever may be the outcome of these experiments, there can be no doubt that the desire to see an end made to present-day licentiousness and extravagance is being expressed more and more frequently in the German musical Press. Is a return to sanity, order and simplicity possible? We would fain hope that it is not impossible, but musical history seems to show no successful precedent for such a course. Even the wildest musical extravagances committed before our eyes (or ears) and causing us to turn away in disgust, may really be but further turns of the wheel of progress, and however greatly we may desire to hold it back, we shall have to be content with confessing ourselves helpless in the face of facts, and to hear the pioneers of 'progress' exclaim with Galileo: 'E pur si muove' (And yet it moves).

The thirteen volumes of the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Oestereich'—which for several years have been issued under the direction of Prof. Guido Adler—are of much historical importance. From these pages knowledge can be gained of excellent works composed in former times, all of which had their origin in Austria and exercised a strong influence on the development of music generally. The series includes Lieder by the minnesinger Oswald von Wolkenstein; sacred and secular songs of the 15th century, as noted in the Trent Codices; polyphonic works by Jacobus Gallus and Orazio Benevoli; sacred works by Heinrich Isaac; clavier and organ compositions by Froberger, Pachelbel, Muffat, Poglietti, Reutter, Tob, Richter; Cesti's great festival opera; 'Il pomo d'oro'; the instrumental and vocal works of J. J. Fux, Caldara, Stadtmayer, Biber, Hammerschmidt, and others. Many erudite musicians have aided in the preparation of these volumes, with valuable assistance from the heads of the old-established firm of Messrs. Artaria, the publishers of this monumental work.

One can invariably find something interesting in looking through a list of subscribers to a musical work. The German Bach Society's publications furnish no exception to the rule. Here before us is a volume of Church Cantatas issued forty-six years ago. Who were the Bach enthusiasts in Great Britain then—those who could afford to subscribe for the volumes of the Society as they appeared? The total number of copies subscribed for in this country was fifty-four. London is headed with the British Museum, followed by names that are household words: e.g., Herr Dr. W. St. Bennett, Herr W. T. Best, Herr W. H. Cummings, Herr Otto Goldschmidt, Herr E. [? G.] Grove, Herr E. J. Hopkins, Herr J. Hullah, Frau E. Stirling, &c. The University Libraries of Cambridge and Edinburgh each subscribed for one copy, but Oxford is represented only by Herr L. G. Hayne and Herr H. S. Oakeley. Under the place name of Barfield, we find Herr C. A. Barry; under Manchester, Herr C. Hallé; under Slough, Herr F. Ouseley, Baronet; under Windsor (two subscribers), Herr Verrinder; and under York, Herr Rob. M. Darnell, 'Capitain d. I. York-Regim.' The only music publisher's name in the list is that of Herren Ewer & Co. Of foreign names there are: Frau Dr. Clara Schumann (Berlin); Otto Jahn (Bonn); R. Franz (Halle); J. Brahms, Tonkünstler (Hamburg); J. Joachim, Concertmeister (Hanover); Hauptmann and Moscheles (Leipzig); Dr. Chrysander (Vellahn); Dr. Fr. Liszt (Weimar); Nottebohm (Vienna); Niels W. Gade (Copenhagen); Camille Saint-Saëns, Julius Stockhausen, and Madame Pauline Viardot-Garcia (Paris). The United States are credited with thirteen copies, of which eight are assigned to Boston and two to New York. To the foregoing must be added 'Ihre Majestät die Königin von England' and 'Seine Königliche Hoheit der Prinz Albert von Sachsen-Koburg-Gotha, Gemahl Ihrer Majestät der Königin von England,' each one copy. The name of Richard Wagner is absent from this interesting list of subscribers to the mighty music of John Sebastian Bach.

A moving ceremony to honour the memory of Verdi took place recently, according to the Italian papers, at Roncole, the master's birthplace. A procession of several hundred peasants, the village priest in his robes at their head, wended its way to the house where the composer of 'Il Trovatore,' 'Aida,' 'Otello,' &c., first saw the light. There, at a sign from the priest, the peasants knelt down in prayer, after which a memorial stone was unveiled, which states that it was erected by the poor of the village to show their gratitude. As a matter of fact it was paid for by the mites of fifty poor families to whom Verdi had in his will left a small yearly rente. 'Perhaps,' says the Italian musical journal Il Trovatore—not without some likelihood that it is very near the truth—'this is the first memorial to the great master which has been erected from real gratitude and deep veneration, and not by a committee of place-hunters who, in professing to do honour to a distinguished man, are but hoping to see honour in the form of titles or orders showered upon themselves.'

We much regret that the settlement of the action which Mrs. Shearer brought against Dr. Cummings for possession of Handel's watch was wrongly stated in our last issue. One of the terms of the arrangement was that the watch should be returned by the Defendant to Mrs. Shearer, who therefore is now the possessor of this interesting relic of the great composer. We beg to apologise to Mrs. Shearer for the mistake which we unfortunately made.

Diversity of opinion among the musical critics abundantly manifested itself in the notices of the Philharmonic Concert of May 2 regarding Herr von Dohnányi's Pianoforte concerto. We give some of the pros and cons in parallel columns:

FOR.

Among modern pianoforte concertos, few or none surpass that of Herr von Dohnányi in beauty, spontaneity of invention, fineness of design, or brilliance of effect. . . . In the six-and-a-half years since Dr. Richter introduced it to the London public it has lost none of its charm and freshness.

It is a work of great fascination; the fresh upwelling of an ardent and reflective spirit. It is marred by no trace of laborious craft, but positively shines with the lustre of youthful vitality.

The themes are characteristic and the workmanship skilful, and throughout there is a romantic Hungarian spirit. The writing in the Allegro is bold. The slow movement, with its modern march theme, is very impressive. The Finale, though often striking, is too long. The composer achieves a certain outward unity by using the thematic material of the first movement in the rest of the work.

AGAINST.

Wednesday night's Philharmonic Concert reminded us irresistibly of a famous "mot" of Rossini's. It had its good moments, but it also had its bad quarters of an hour. One of the worst of the latter—and a terribly long quarter of an hour it was!—was furnished by Herr von Dohnányi's piano concerto . . . . Herr von Dohnányi's brilliant playing would reconcile [us?] to anything in the world but his own concerto, which is really nothing but a string of ill-digested reminiscences of Brahms and Liszt, special prominence being given to the least attractive mannerisms of each composer.

It is the music of a man who knows his Brahms well, but who has not much that is original to say. Its melodies are not very interesting or attractive, which is all the more to be regretted, as they are developed at great length, while, though the concerto contains much that is very clever, it contains little that is calculated to move the hearer.

One daily journal, although it gave a detailed notice of every other item in the concert, totally ignored the concerto!

Richard Strauss is reported to have just completed a new large choral work for men's voices and orchestra, entitled 'Bardengesang' (Bards' song). The poem is taken from Kleist's drama 'Herrmanns-Schlacht'—i.e., Arminius's Battle, A.D. 9, in which 50,000 Romans under Varus were annihilated in the Teutoburg Forest by the Teutons under Arminius, alias Hermann. The subject should give the redoubtable Richard II. ample opportunity for infusing a sturdy barbaric flavour into his music, something, let us say, like that which makes the Mannen's chorus in 'Götterdämmerung' one of the most exhilarating things in our art. Yet we may be sure that Strauss will be as individual in this latest emanation of his brilliant, busy brain as he always is. A work of a very different calibre should be a Parade-March which he has written for the regiment 'Königs-Jäger zu Pferde No. 1' (King's mounted sharpshooters, a new branch of the German Army). This will be published for orchestra as well as military band. What with this Parade March and the Königsmarsch (referred to on page 417), is R. Strauss trying to steal a march on Sir Edward Elgar?

Dr. McNaught says that the vibrato voice is a vibrato vice. Subtract that vice is his advice.

The visit to London last month of the Vienna Männergesangverein was a most interesting event, whether regarded from an international or highly artistic point of view. These gentlemen not only gave performances that were technically flawless, but they idealised the strains they so beautifully sang by an undercurrent of intuitiveness calling for the highest praise—in other words, they poetised the music—getting behind its crotchets and quavers, so to speak—with results that were overwhelming in impressiveness and true feeling. We refer (on p. 402) in further detail to the first concert given by our artistic visitors, whom we shall warmly welcome again if they will favour us with another visit.

The Sunday Strand for May contains an interesting illustrated article on 'Musical Competition Festivals,' referring chiefly to the pioneer centres of Këndal, Morecambe, and Blackpool. The Lord Chief Justice of these music-makings is referred to in these words:

Dr. W. G. McNaught is facile princeps among adjudicators, often acting alone and sometimes sharing the duty along with men like the late Sir John Stainer, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, Mr. Percy Pitt, and Sir Edward Elgar; but Dr. McNaught is the one real expert. Possessed of fine physique, ceaseless energy, and tremendous capacity for work, the genial, breezy manner in which his remarks are delivered, his nimble wit and his ability to say the necessary, but not always palatable, word of criticism in such a manner as to take away the bitterness without impairing the efficacy of his remarks—all these qualities endear him to competitors and audience alike. But to see Dr. McNaught at his best you must be present on 'Children's Day.' He is inimitable when leading on the young idea. The tinier the little tot the more consideration does it receive; and the hardworking school teacher, in a few kindly words of praise and encouragement from him, experiences a feeling of greater reward than either the prize or the plaudits of the audience could produce.

The article wisely concludes thus:

Not only are teachers, conductors, and choralists being provided with object-lessons and ideals of execution not otherwise readily obtainable, but inefficiency is learning from wise criticism. The vast crowds that gather are being schooled as well, their tastes moulded and elevated, their power to discriminate between good and bad rendered more acute, thus being made not only more appreciative, but, what is of greater importance, more intelligent hearers, intolerant of the wishy-washy stuff so often put before the public by musicians who ought to know better.

Thus it will be seen that wherever these festivals are in operation their effect distinctly raises the whole tone of musical life. What will be the end of it all, who can say? Certainly not we of this generation.

Madame Wanda Landowska, the well-known Polish pianist and performer on the harpsichord, recently gave a recital at the Salle Pleyel, Paris, when her programme included two specimens of 'Cuckoo' music, the well-known piece of that name by the French composer Daquin, and the almost unknown 'Cuckoo' of Bernardo Pasquini. The latter piece seems to have been highly appreciated by both the public and the critics, one of the latter speaking of it as 'adorable,' and praising the poetry and remarkable freedom of form of the music written towards the end of the 17th century. This toccata con lo Scherzo del Cucco, as it is entitled, has been selected as 'pièce de concours' this year at the Liège Conservatoire. It is in the 'Collection of pieces for the harpsichord' by Bernardo Pasquini, edited by Mr. J. S. Shedlock and published by Messrs. Novello.

The Handel Festival has again come round in its triennial orbit, and as aforetime the Crystal Palace is the place of this gigantic music-making. A change in the usual arrangements is the substitution of 'Judas Maccabæus' for 'Israel in Egypt' on the last day of the Festival, though a goodly portion of the latter oratorio will find a place in the Selection day programme. The dates are as follows :

Saturday, June 23	... Grand Rehearsal	at noon.
Tuesday, June 26	... The Messiah
Thursday, June 28,	Selection, including
	part of Israel in Egypt.	at 2 p.m.
Saturday, June 30	Judas Maccabæus

The solo vocalists are Madame Albani, Miss Perceval Allen and Miss Agnes Nicholls ; Madame Clara Butt and Madame Kirkby Lunn ; Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Charles Saunders ; Mr. Watkin Mills, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Mr. Robert Radford and Mr. Santley. The London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged as the solo band ; Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, Musical Director to the Crystal Palace, takes his place at the organ for the fifth time at these Festivals, and the whole will be conducted by Dr. Frederic Cowen. As to the chorus, it is to be seasoned by a strong Yorkshire contingent of singers, and does not that speak for itself on these Handelian occasions ?

A Friedrich Kiel Society has been formed at Berlin which aims at keeping before the public, by means of occasional performances, the works of that composer which in the opinion of the members of the Society have been allowed to fall into premature and undeserved neglect. Kiel (1821-1885) was certainly a master of his craft who, like so many of his contemporaries, was overshadowed by the colossal genius of Wagner and the growing appreciation of Brahms—an appreciation, by-the-way, which has grown apace since the great Johannes closed his eyes in death on April 3, 1897. If Friedrich Kiel needs the assistance of a special Society to revive an interest in his music, what is to be done for, say, Anton Rubinstein and Joachim Raff, two masters who in their prime were seriously put forward as rivals of Wagner and Brahms, but whose most ambitious works have already been cast aside like an old shoe ? Only on rare occasions a performance of one of their compositions serves to remind us that not so very long ago these two distinguished men gave pleasure to and excited enthusiasm in thousands of music-lovers. That in the face of such cruel turns of Fortune's wheel young composers still come forward in a never-failing stream, anxious to emulate the greatest masters and to fight on per aspera ad astra, serves at any rate to prove that youth is ever the same and learns wisdom only as the fire of the soul burns itself out ; the rust of bitter disappointment eats into the iron will that would ever 'try again,' and into the heart of steel that was proof against rebuff and despair so long as youth was the artist's priceless possession. How many gifted and enthusiastic young musicians have we not watched interestedly and expectantly up to the point when, broken in spirit because success came not, they grew soured, cynical and barren, and filled with a contemptuous pity for the 'young fools' who would still burn with enthusiasm because they had youth. Ah ! youth, youth ! what a marvellous thing it is !

The singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls at the Westmorland Festival was described in a local paper as 'a game performance.' Presumably this had especial reference to her high notes.

The Westminster Gazette of May 21 has a charmingly written article entitled 'Rural Music,' which describes the Competition held at Brigg, in North Lincolnshire, last month. The writer of the article is Miss Violette Londa, one of the principal vocalists at the festival. We give an extract from this very readable description of an interesting event :

The air grows thicker ; but the judging continues, and the heat seems to increase the enthusiasm. The interest culminates in the group of ancients who in turn sing the old folk-songs. Some can only recall one verse ; but this is better than nothing. Others go through verse after verse without a pause. One very old man, supporting himself on a stick, pipes interminably. As his ditty has already been printed by the Society, and as the hour is late, he is gently told after many verses that no more is at present required ; but being almost stone deaf, he steadily proceeds. Another delicate hint is unavailing ; and, after some shouting, he at length understands, and retires unabashed amid much good-natured chaff.

This chaff doubtless went against the grain of that deaf old folk-songster.

As the bride entered the church with her father, who subsequently gave her away, the organist (Mr. —) played Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The bride was dressed in white satin, draped with Brussels lace (the gift of her mother), and wore a long veil.

Thus a country newspaper in reporting a wedding. One may draw a veil, even a long veil, over the feelings of the bridal party at the unbridled enthusiasm of an organist who played an entire oratorio as a preliminary to this nuptial ceremony.

Mr. J. Ojijatekha Brant-Sero sends us the following Mohawk version, made by himself, of the tenor solo 'Onaway ! Awake, beloved' from Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' :

'Oh na wah ! ji yeh, tya den roh !
Ne O ji ja ka'r ha gon ha !
Ne jih den ha ka hon da geh !
Ne skah ri yoh wah sat kah tho !
Nok I-ih das kya do reh deh,
'Kats hon non nih, 'Kats hon non nih.
O ak ji ja, ka hon da geh,
Wa gon't do keh O'r hon ge neh !
Ji wa gon don tih 'on kes ho
O ji ja yo dih de ron nih.
Wa kes hos 'on gwah ka rah weh,
Eh Ni Dá wa ka ne'rah den.'

Likewise a Mohawkian translation of the first few lines of the same cantata :

Do sat hon dek Pau-Puk-Keewis,
Ra ne kenh 't'ron Yenadizze,
Dèa nyoth Hiawatha ho-nyak ;
Nah ha tye reh Chibiabos

Ra'onha ra rih wa we yen hon, etc.

It will be observed that the chief feature of the language is its almost entire lack of lip letters (labials). Whatever may be the merits or demerits of the above poetry, its lines will serve as excellent studies in vowel pronunciation.

The following may serve as a sequel to the article on St. John's College, Oxford, in our last issue. Dr. Wynter, the venerable Dr. Bellamy's predecessor in the office of President, was a very handsome man who was accustomed to ride a fine horse. When taking his usual equestrian exercise, undergraduates and others were wont to exclaim 'Here comes St. John's head on a charger' !

Attention is called to the British-Canadian festival concert to be given in Queen's Hall on June 27, at which the following composers will conduct performances of their own works: Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Charles Stanford, Sir Edward Elgar, Dr. Cowen and Dr. Charles Harriss. Madame Albani, Mlle. Pauline Donalda and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies will be the solo vocalists, and the London Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 250 voices will take part. Full particulars will be found in our advertisement columns.

In criticising a performance of a Schubert symphony a country newspaper says: 'For about half-an-hour the orchestra held the audience spell-bound, the only relief being the outbursts of applause as the musicians passed from item to item in alphabetical order.' After all this is not so very strange as it at first appears. As the audience were spell-bound (bound to spell), what more natural than that the orchestra should set before them an orderly arrangement of the alphabet in musical tones?

'Crotched Dotted' is the author of an article on Hereford Cathedral which recently appeared in these columns, according to so high an authority as the Zeitschriftschau of the Monthly Journal of the International Musical Society. In the same publication (the April issue) there are references to 'Joung teachers of beginners,' 'Edwin Jork-Bowen,' and 'Jankee Doodle.' We ask, Why are these initial J's not Y's but foolish? Because the Journal is printed in Germany. Perchance a word to the wise may result in Y's to the words.

The present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES is increased in size by four pages: notwithstanding this enlargement the conclusion of the article on 'Musical Prodigies' is unavoidably deferred till next month owing to the great pressure on our space.

A CURIOUS CHURCH CANTATA OF BACH.

'Now really you must come to Cologne . . . Pray do come; I am so sure you will care for the music. I do not yet know how the performance will go off; we have the whole festival made up of seldom-performed music; but there is a glorious Cantata of Sebastian Bach's amongst the number, with a double chorus in it, which would repay for the journey by itself.' Thus wrote Mendelssohn to his English publisher J. Alfred Novello, in a letter dated 'Leipzig, April 7, 1838.' This pressing invitation was to the Lower Rhine Festival of that year, which he (Mendelssohn) conducted. In a letter written after the Festival to Ferdinand Hiller he says: 'It all went well; the organ was splendidly effective in Handel [Joshua] and still more so in Bach—it was some newly-discovered music of his which you don't yet know, with a pompous double chorus.'

Now, as no known Cantata by Bach contains a double chorus, the question naturally arises, What could this 'newly-discovered music' be? One naturally turns to the leading German musical papers which recorded the Festival performances, but only to find a mere mention of the Bach Cantata. An English musical journal, however, supplies the information that is lacking in the Teutonic musical press. In an excellent account of the Cologne Festival, the Musical World of June 27, 1838,—published one day earlier than usual on account of the Coronation of Queen Victoria—refers in the opening paragraph to 'a recently-discovered Cantata of John Sebastian Bach, entitled "The Ascension Day,"' and subsequently to the work itself in the following words:

The cantata, Zum Himmelfahrtstage, by J. S. Bach, opens with a chorus, followed by a tenor solo, a soprano solo, a noble eight-part chorus, and a fine choral which concludes the work. It was admirably performed; and as it is about to be published, we shall have an opportunity of referring more particularly to its merits as a composition.

As the above description by no means agrees with the contents of Bach's published Ascension cantata, it seemed desirable to institute inquiries in Germany for further particulars concerning the work 'discovered' in 1838. Through the kindness of Dr. Prieger, of Bonn, and of Hermann Kipper, of Cologne, a word-book of the Festival has been found which gives the following text of this somewhat mysterious composition:

Tenor Solo: Recit. and Aria.—'Lasst uns dem Herr der Herren ein Siegesgepränge bereiten.'

Soprano Solo: Recit. and Aria.—'Wie soll ich Dir, ich sündiger Mensch ein würdig Loblied singen.'

*Soprano Solo: Recit.—'Und der Herr, nachdem er mit ihnen geredet hatte, ward er aufgehoben gen Himmel,' &c.

Double Chorus.—'Nun ist das Heil.'

Choral.—'Lasst uns alle unsere Tage.'

Only two numbers—those marked * in the above list—are to be found in the Himmelfahrts cantata, 'Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen' ('God goeth up with shouting')—assuming that the music of these two numbers is the same. But the curious thing is this, that with the exception of the double chorus ('Nun ist das Heil'), not one of the remaining numbers, associated with the above words, is to be found in Bach's published works! In regard to the double chorus 'Nun ist das Heil'—sung by the Bach Choir on February 16, 1882, to the English text 'Now shall the Grace'—Spitta says: ('Life of Bach,' Eng. trans., iii., 82):

A mighty torso of a church cantata is preserved in a double chorus with the richest orchestral accompaniment, on the words from Rev. xii., 10, 'Nun ist das Heil,' &c.—'Now shall the Grace,' &c. It must be called a torso, for it seems that in its present form it falls in with no church use whatever. It is too short to lay claim to the title of a church cantata in regular form; it cannot serve as a motet by reason of its concerted accompaniments, and its subject of course would forbid all thought of its being performed during the communion service; and there is no other occasion for which it would be suitable. It must certainly have formed the opening of a complete cantata for Michaelmas, and it may be assumed to have had an orchestral prelude. The colossal piece, however, by itself, with its ponderous march and its wild cries of victory, is an imperishable monument of German art.

Drawing conclusions from the foregoing information, it looks as if the Cantata performed at the Cologne Festival in 1838 was a pasticcio which Mendelssohn or some other enthusiastic Bachist 'discovered.' Who concocted it, or whether the work was entirely composed by Bach, cannot at present be determined. The music seems to have disappeared, though search is being made for it. In the meantime it is strange that attention has not hitherto been called to a matter of so much interest in connection with the music of the great Cantor and one of his truest disciples, Mendelssohn.

JUBILEE OF THE FOUNDATION OF DIOCESAN CHORAL ASSOCIATIONS.

On Wednesday, June 27, a Jubilee Festival of Parish Choirs is to be held, under the auspices of the Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association, in Lichfield Cathedral. This interesting event is of more than local importance in that the Jubilee commemorates the first of these imposing services held in England. 'Established 1856' is the proud boast of Lichfield, and this led the way in the formation of many other Diocesan Choral Associations not only in the Mother-country but in the Colonies and in America.

Like many things of sturdy growth and vigorous strength the parent Association of Lichfield is the result of a seed sown in good soil. In the year 1849 was formed the 'Cheadle Association for promoting Church Music.' 'One of the first acts on its formation'—records The Parish Choir of November, 1850—'was to bring together the choirs of several of the neighbouring parishes for the purpose of practising chanting and singing. On the 4th of October, 1849, a public meeting (sic) of the choirs took place in the parish church of Cheadle [Staffordshire], and proved so successful that it was then determined to hold a meeting of the same kind every year.' A year later—August 29, 1850—the Cheadle Association held two services, morning and evening, in the parish church of Leigh, at which nine choirs, numbering a hundred voices, took part. Here we have a miniature choral festival. Six years later Canon Hutchinson, rector of Blurton, North Staffordshire, and Precentor of Lichfield Cathedral, and moreover an enthusiastic supporter of the Cheadle movement, induced the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral to invite the choirs of the diocese to hold a festival within the walls of the mother-church. The invitation was accepted by twenty-six choirs in Staffordshire—notwithstanding the fact that the facilities for railway travelling were not so great as they are now—and on October 14, 1856, the first Diocesan Choral Festival in England was held in Lichfield Cathedral.

So successful was this initial effort that a second festival took place on October 6, 1857. The Festival Book on that occasion was a modest publication of sixteen pages, in size  $5 \times 4\frac{1}{2}$  inches, and entitled :

The | PSALMS OF THE DAY ; together with the | HUNDRETH PSALM | and the | PROPER
INTROIT | for the | Diocesan meeting of parish choirs to be held in the | cathedral church of Lichfield, | on Tuesday, October 6th, 1857.

We give the first page of this quaint little festival-book in facsimile, the border lines showing the exact size of the page :

THE PSALMS.

PSALM xcv.—Venite, exultemus Domino.

1. O COME, let us sing un - - to the Lord :
let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation.
2. Let us come before His présence · with thanksgiving :
and shew ourselves · glad in Him with psalms.
3. For the Lórd is a · great — God :
and a great · King a - -bove all — gods.
4. In His hand are all the córners · of the earth :
and the stréngth of the · hills is His — also.
5. The sea is · His, and He made it :
and His hánds pre - · -par - -ed the dry — land.

1. Attend to all stops as in reading.

2. Lay stress upon a word that has an accent over it (Τόνος), and do not dwell upon any that may remain to be sung to the recitation note.

3. The dot (·) marks the commencement of the mediation or cadence, to each minim of which a syllable is to be taken, giving whatever may remain to the last note. In exceptional cases the words will be spaced out thus (joy cometh in the morning), to shew what belongs to each note.

4. Hyphens shew that two or more notes are to be taken to one syllable. Thus (and — — I was troubled), when the recitation note and two minims of the cadence will be sung to the word 'and.'

The barless chant, the system of pointing, and the quartet of rules for chanting will not escape notice. Verses 6—11 of the Venite were sung to a minor version of Pelham Humphrey's chant. Mournful strains seem to have been somewhat in evidence at this festival service. Psalms 30 and 31 were assigned to Morley's double chant in D minor, and the 'Introit for the 17th Sunday after Trinity' (vv. 129—136 of Psalm 119) to T. Purcell's single chant in G minor. At Evening Prayer, Psalm 31 was sung to Dr. Alcock's single chant in G minor, but Psalms 33 and 34 were chanted to the major form of that chant, composed by a former organist of Lichfield Cathedral. The Old 100th tune was not sung in the minor key. It seems evident that the chants had to be memorised by the singers, as on the turn-over pages of the Psalms the music was not repeated. The service was 'Rogers in D' and the anthem (in the morning) Croft's 'Cry aloud and shout,' neither being printed in the service-book as in the present day.

In strong contrast to the publication above described is 'The Order of Service' appointed for the Jubilee Festival which, like that of fifty years ago, Messrs. Novello have printed. In addition to hymn-tunes and chants, the selection for the two services (Matins and Evensong) includes Te Deum, Ouseley in D; Benedictus, Calkin in D; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, Prout in F; anthems, 'It came even to pass' (Ouseley) and 'The Lord hath done great things for us' (John E. West). The last-named, composed by request for the occasion, will be accompanied by the organ, brass instruments, and drums, an exceedingly effective instrumental combination as a support to a large body of voices, and one that has been a feature at these Lichfield festivals during the greater part of their existence. The conductorship of the Jubilee Festival will be safe in the experienced hands of Mr. John B. Lott, organist of the cathedral. As the Preface to the Festival Book truly states: 'The good work inaugurated in Lichfield half-a-century ago has borne fruit all over the country.' May all success attend the interesting commemoration on June 27, and may the Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association enter upon a fresh and successful career of usefulness in promoting all that is good and true in the cause of English Church music.

BISHOP BICKERSTETH AND THE REV. H. A. WALKER.

The deaths of two clergymen whose names are well-known in connection with church music have to be recorded with regret—the Right Rev. Edward Henry Bickersteth, ex-Bishop of Exeter, and the Rev. Henry Aston Walker, vicar of Chattisham, Ipswich. Dr. Bickersteth, who died in London on May 16, promoted and edited the 'Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer,' first issued in 1870, and he is known in all the churches by his hymn 'Peace, perfect peace.' Mr. Walker, who died at Enfield on May 8, was a great advocate of Plain-song in the services of the church; but he is best known as the compiler and editor of 'Music of the Appendix to the Hymnal Noted, as used at St. Alban's, Holborn,' a book that is known as 'The St. Alban's Tune Book,' and in which Thomas Hewlett's familiar tune 'Dalketh,' originally written for Lyte's hymn 'Abide with me,' first appeared.

The service-paper for Easter Day and the following Sunday of St. George's Church, Montreal—of which Mr. Percival J. Illsley is the organist and choirmaster—bears ample testimony that the cause of English church music is being well sustained in Canada.

THE ORGANISTS OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

Sir George Martin is very anxious to obtain a complete list of the organists of St. Paul's in order that their names may be inscribed on a tablet which it is proposed to place in the cathedral. So far as can be at present ascertained the following have held the office of chief musician of the Metropolitan Church:

John Redford	-	-	-	-	1543? or 1546?
Thomas Gyles	-	-	-	-	in 1549
Thomas Morley	-	-	-	-	1591, or 1592
John Tomkins	}	Joint organists	{		1622
Adrian Batten
Albertus Bryan	-	-	-	-	1669
Isaac Blackwell	-	-	-	-	1687
Jeremiah Clarke	-	-	-	-	1699
Richard Brind	-	-	-	-	1708
Maurice Greene	-	-	-	-	1718
John Jones	-	-	-	-	1755
Thomas Attwood	-	-	-	-	1796
John Goss	-	-	-	-	1838
John Stainer	-	-	-	-	1872

The dates are those of appointments, or when the office was held. The above list is obviously incomplete. Sir George Martin would therefore be glad of any assistance in filling up the gaps. Perhaps some of our readers of an antiquarian turn of mind may, from out of the way sources of information, aid the present organist of St. Paul's in his worthy endeavour.

The new organ built by Messrs. Lewis & Co., Ltd., in the new Assembly Hall, Belfast, was opened on April 19 by Mr. Alfred Hollins, who played the following pieces with masterly skill to the delight of an enthusiastic audience:

Toccata in F	..	..	..	..	..	Back.
Andante in D	..	..	..	..	..	Hollins.
Prelude to 'Parsifal'	..	..	..	..	..	Wagner.

Improvisation.
Intermezzo	{	..	..	..	..	Hollins.
Spring song		..	..	..	..
Overture, 'William Tell'	..	..	..	..	..	Rossini.

The theme given for the Improvisation was 'The minstrel boy,' which the recitalist as is his wont treated with remarkable ingenuity. Mrs. Herbert Nixon and Mr. Alfred Hollins played Guilmant's 'Scherzo capriccio' for pianoforte and organ, and Miss McKisack sang four songs, including Mr. Hollins's 'Divided,' with exquisite taste and charm of voice.

The following is the specification of the new instrument, which is the gift of Mr. William M. Cuthbert, of Capetown

Nine Pedals of Combinations:

Five to pedal organ alone; by drawing a knob they are connected to act on five great key-touches. Four to swell organ.

Twenty-seven Key Touches:

- Nine to each manual.
- Tremulant to choir organ actuated by pedal.
- Tremulant to swell organ actuated by pedal.
- Balanced crescendo pedal for choir organ.
- Balanced crescendo pedal for swell organ.
- Balanced crescendo pedal over entire organ.

REMARKS.

Detached console, organ stool with adjustable top. Organ case, console and stool of best Austrian wainscot oak.

Tubular-pneumatic action throughout.

Wind-pressures average from  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to 13 inches.

The metal pipes throughout—with the exception of those forming the front, which are of zinc (silvered)—are made of the best 'spotted metal.' The organ is tuned to the French Diapason Normal, C 517'3.

The two hydraulic engines, by Messrs. Watkins & Watson, of London, and separate bellows and feeders are placed in the basement of hall. Separate reservoir for each manual, and also for the pedal organ.

This is the first instrument in Ireland fitted with Messrs. Lewis's patent system of combination key-touches. Nine small keys are placed between the sharps of each manual, and are arranged so as to be easily manipulated by either hand of the player. Each key-touch is connected with a light pneumatic valve working an arranged combination. The slightest pressure of the finger on the key-touch at once shows its combination on the draw-stop board, telling the organist the exact change effected. One great advantage of this system is that, if desired, any key-touch can be made to act simultaneously on the draw-stops of any department.

The crescendo pedal throws on or off the whole organ gradually, without interfering with the draw-stop knobs.

The Church of England community at Chinkiang (China) has become the fortunate possessor of a fine American organ, the gift of a resident, Mr. Edgeworth Starkey. The organ was opened on March 12 with a recital given by Mr. B. G. Tours, the community showing its appreciation of Mr. Starkey's generosity and the musical interest of the occasion by attending in full force. Mr. Tours was assisted in a vocal number by Mrs. Tours, who was also responsible to the great enjoyment of the audience for a violin solo. The programme was as follows:

Organ solo .. ..	March .. ..	Smart.
Organ solo .. ..	Invocation .. ..	Salomé.
Vocal duet .. ..	from 'Elijah' .. ..	Mendelssohn.
Organ solo .. ..	Grand Chœur .. ..	Guilmant.
Violin solo .. ..	Largo .. ..	Handel.
Organ solo .. ..	(a) Andante .. ..	Westrop.
	(b) Allegretto .. ..
Vocal solo .. ..	The lost chord .. ..	Sullivan.
Organ solo .. ..	Grand Chœur .. ..	Salomé.

The lot of cathedral choristers nowadays compares very favourably with the shocking neglect the boys experienced in days gone by. We have before us a well arranged programme of a little concert given on April 26 entirely by the choristers of Salisbury Cathedral. Without giving the title of every piece performed at the pleasant music-making of these little men, we may mention that the scheme included Reinecke's cantata 'Little snowdrop,' Haydn's 'Toy symphony,' a pianoforte trio, a pianoforte duet (Sullivan's 'Dance of nymphs and reapers' from his 'Tempest' music), a duet for two pianofortes, songs and two-part songs, and, as the last item and one quite in keeping with cathedral precincts, a Canon. The training of the boys—who gave much pleasure to their audience—had been undertaken by the cathedral organist, Mr. Charles F. South and Mrs. South, who are to be warmly congratulated, as are the choristers themselves, for results so excellent and commendable.

An interesting Bach concert was given in Glasgow Cathedral on April 23 by the Atheneum Choral Society (Glasgow) under the direction of Mr. J. Michael Dick, with Mr. Herbert Walton, organist of the cathedral, at the organ. The programme included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, the Passacaglia for organ, and the church cantata 'My spirit was in heaviness.' It is pleasant to learn that Bach's vocal music has found a home in a Scottish cathedral. All efforts that are made for spreading the knowledge of his church cantatas—so rich in their artistic and devotional potentialities—deserve every encouragement and commendation.

At Montreux the Choral Society (English) has given a selection from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in St. John's Church, Territet, under the direction of Mr. John Lomas, organist of the church and conductor of the Society. This performance has brought to a close a series of pleasant meetings for practice during the winter months in the Swiss town on the Lake of Geneva.

Obituary.

With regret we record the deaths of the following, the bearers of honoured names in the realm of music.

DAVID BAPTIE.

On March 26, at Glasgow, after a week's illness, DAVID BAPTIE, in his eighty-third year. Born at Glasgow on St. Andrew's-day—as is quite natural to a good Scot—Mr. Baptie is favourably known as the author of two useful biographical books of reference: 'A Handbook of Musical Biography' (1883), and 'Musicians of all times' (2nd edition, 1897). He edited several hymn-tune books published in Scotland, and composed some anthems. A self-taught musician, he devoted special attention to glees, of which he composed several, and compiled a capital little book entitled 'Sketches of the English Glee Composers, historical, biographical and critical.' But this is not all. A most industrious worker, he began in 1846 to compile a 'Descriptive Catalogue' of part-songs, glees, madrigals, trios, quartets, &c. This occupied him for fifty-two years, up to 1898; and as the entries number several thousands, some idea of the labour involved in the compilation can be imagined. These valuable manuscript volumes were fortunately acquired by the British Museum, where they are available for reference.

PROF. J. K. PAINE.

On April 20, suddenly, at his house at Cambridge, Mass., JOHN KNOWLES PAINE, aged sixty-seven, a distinguished American composer. Born at Portland, Me., January 9, 1839, Prof. Paine studied under Kotschmer (at Portland), and Haupt, Fischer and Teschner (at Berlin). An excellent concert-organist, he gave recitals in Berlin and in various American cities and became the chief organist in the United States. He then settled at Boston, where he held the organistship of the West Church, Cambridge Street. In 1862 he was appointed teacher of music at Harvard University, and since 1876 he has held, ever since its foundation, the Professorship of Music at Harvard, the first chair of music created at any American University. His compositions—which have placed him in the front rank of American creative musicians—include two symphonies: in C minor (1876), and A major entitled 'Spring' (1880); two symphonic poems: 'The Tempest' (1877) and 'An Island Fancy'; an overture; several pieces of chamber music; pianoforte and organ solos, part-songs, songs, &c. His vocal works include a Mass in D (performed at the Singakademie at Berlin); 'St. Peter,' an oratorio (1873); three cantatas: 'The Realm of Fancy,' 'The Nativity' (1883), and 'Song of Promise' (Cincinnati festival, 1888); a 'Centennial hymn,' words by Whittier, composed for the Centennial Exhibition of the United States held at Philadelphia in 1876, for which Wagner composed his 'Centennial March'; 'Columbus March and Hymn' (Chicago Exhibition, 1892), and 'Hymn of the West,' for the inauguration of the St. Louis Exhibition in 1904; also a setting of 'Edipus Tyrannus' (Harvard, 1881); music for 'The Birds' of Aristophanes (1901), and an opera 'Azara,' of which he himself wrote the libretto. Prof. Paine may be regarded as the Nestor of American composers who have cast their creations in the great classical forms. When he began his career he stood alone in his artistic aspirations. Now there are others imbued with the same lofty ideals—to mention only three names: Chadwick, MacDowell and Horatio Parker; but Paine was a pioneer in the pathway of progress, and as such his name should be held in grateful memory.

MR. W. H. ELGAR.

On April 30, at 10, High Street, Worcester, WILLIAM HENRY ELGAR, in his eighty-fifth year, father of Sir Edward Elgar. A native of Dover, Mr. Elgar became an assistant in the music-publishing house of Messrs. Coventry & Hollier, then in Dean Street, Soho. There he used to hear Dragonetti play the pedal part—his own bowdlerised version!—of Bach's organ fugues on the double-bass.

In 1841 he settled at Worcester, and with his brother started the well-known music-selling business in that city. A thorough musician and an excellent violinist,—he played in the orchestra at the Worcester Musical Festivals—Mr. Elgar became organist of St. George's Roman Catholic Church, Worcester, a post he held for thirty-seven years and in which he was succeeded by his gifted son.

MADAME LEMMENS SHERRINGTON.

On May 9, at 7, Rue Capouillet, Brussels, HELEN LEMMENS SHERRINGTON, aged seventy-one. Born at Preston, of English parents, on October 4, 1834, this distinguished vocalist spent her childhood at Rotterdam, whither her family migrated in 1838. There she studied singing under Verhulst and later on she obtained a scholarship at the Brussels Conservatoire, where she distinguished herself by taking the first-prize for singing and declamation. Miss Sherrington made her first appearance in England at the concert of the Amateur Musical Society, conducted by Henry Leslie, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on April 7, 1856, and shortly afterwards she sang at one of Hullah's concerts. In the autumn of the same year she obtained her first festival engagement at Bradford, conducted by Costa, and at which Madame Clara Novello and Madame Viardot Garcia were engaged. On that occasion she sang the soprano solo music in Macfarren's cantata 'May-day,' which was composed expressly for the festival. Thenceforward she took a front-rank place as an excellent soprano singer in oratorios, concerts, &c., including the Birmingham, Three Choirs, and Handel Festivals in the sixties and seventies. She was no less successful in opera—at Covent Garden for eight years, and in English opera (from 1860), creating the parts of Maid Marian in Macfarren's 'Robin Hood' (1860), and of Hannah in the same composer's 'Helvellyn,' also the title-part in Wallace's 'Amber Witch,' &c. At the first performance in English of Gounod's 'Faust'—Her Majesty's Theatre, January 23, 1864—she appeared as Marguerite, her impersonation of the part calling forth the warmest praise.

In 1857 Miss Sherrington married the late Chevalier Lemmens (he died in 1881), whose compositions for the organ are well known. The wedding was thus announced in The Times on January 8, 1857:—

On the 7th inst., at the Lady's Chapel, St. John's Wood, JACQUES N. LEMMENS, Chevalier de l'Ordre de Leopold, pianiste de S. M. le Roi des Belges, Premier Organiste de la Cour, Professeur au Conservatoire Royal de Bruxelles, to HELEN SHERRINGTON, eldest daughter of John Sherrington, of Leewarden, North Holland.

For many years after their marriage they lived at Finchley Road, London.

From 1850 to 1891 Madame Lemmens Sherrington held a professorship of singing at the Brussels Conservatoire. She subsequently joined the teaching staff of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal Manchester College of Music. Her last appearance in London was at a performance of Benoit's 'Lucifer,' given by the Royal Choral Society, under Barnby, at the Albert Hall on April 3, 1889; but she afterwards sang at the Hallé Concert, Manchester—where she had long been a great favourite—in Haydn's 'Creation,' her most delightful part, on November 1, 1894. As the Manchester Guardian has said: 'On that occasion she only appeared to gratify her old friend [Sir Charles Hallé], and on the understanding that she should receive no fee. It was her final appearance before a public audience.' During the many years—upwards of thirty—that Madame Lemmens Sherrington was before the public, she never failed to please and she remained a true artist throughout her long career. Her versatility manifested itself in such widely contrasted works and styles as Bach's B minor Mass and Auber's opera, 'Fra Diavolo'; while in oratorio she specially distinguished herself by the charm of her voice, her unfailing reliability, and earnestness of artistic purpose. It should be recalled that Madame Lemmens Sherrington sang the soprano solo music at the first and memorable performance in England of Bach's B minor Mass—that given by the Bach Choir, under Mr. Otto Goldschmidt's direction, on April 26, 1876.

CINCINNATI MUSICAL FESTIVAL AND SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Cincinnati, O., May 6.

The seventeenth biennial festival of the Cincinnati Music Festival Association held in this city on the first five days of the month was made notable by the presence of Sir Edward Elgar who came from England to conduct several of his works; by the memorial character of the first concert, which was a tribute to the memory of Theodore Thomas who established the festivals in 1873 and conducted all the predecessors of the present meeting; and by an artistic and financial success which saved the enterprise from threatened dissolution and made a remarkable disclosure of the city's choral resources. Dissensions between the Choir maintained for years by the Festival Association and the Directors of the Association culminated a year ago in the withdrawal of the Choir in a body. Pitiable and pathetic was the fact that the quarrel grew out of an amiable desire on the part of the choristers to give a memorial concert in honor of their dead leader. Mr. Thomas's memory was as dear to the hearts of the Directors as to the singers, but the former preferred to couple the memorial service with the approaching festival and refused to sanction the plan of the Choir. The differences were discussed in an unwise spirit, and after a year had been spent in preparing for the seventeenth festival the Choir seceded. This made necessary a new enlistment of choral forces. Meanwhile Mr. Frank Van der Stucken, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, had been elected as Mr. Thomas's successor. He began his labors in October last and within six months accomplished the surprising feat of training the new choir of 350 voices till all were letter perfect in 'The Apostles,' 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Brahms's 'German Requiem,' Bach's 'Actus Tragicus' and the choral portion of Beethoven's ninth Symphony. A supplementary choir of 1,000 children from the public schools was also trained to sing Benoit's cantata 'Into the world.' The little people acquitted themselves so bravely that the performance of the cantata was one of the red-letter features of the festival from a purely artistic point of view.

Sir Edward Elgar was on the scene a fortnight before the festival began and took upon himself the induction of choristers and instrumentalists into his conception of his two oratorios and the two orchestral works of his composition which were on the festival scheme. They were the overture 'In the South' and the 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings, dedicated to Prof. Sanford, of Yale University. Sir Edward's methods of conducting differed radically from the incisive ones of Mr. Van der Stucken, but the singers were firm in the saddle, and Sir Edward did not find it difficult to imbue them with the spirit of his music. As a result the two oratorios—the first of which was wholly new to the festival audience—received the most impressive performance that they have had in America. The rendering of 'The Dream of Gerontius' was spiritually much more uplifting than at the performance here under Mr. Thomas two years ago, when much more attention was paid to the externals and less to the tender, mystical mood of the composition. Amongst the musicians gathered to hear Sir Edward's reading of the oratorios were Dr. Frank Damrosch—who had been the first in the American field with both 'The Apostles' and 'The Dream,' giving both with his New York Oratorio Society before the echoes of their first English performances had died away—and Mr. Harrison Wild, of Chicago, who performed 'The Apostles' with his Apollo Club on the Monday of festival week. Sir Edward found seclusion at the Country Club where, amid scenes of great natural beauty, he spent most of his spare time reading proofs of the work which is to be the sequel to 'The Apostles' and working on its orchestration. He had already withdrawn himself from most of the social attentions which the people of Cincinnati wished to show him when the mournful intelligence of the death of his father reached him. His manner toward the choristers had won their affection for him and his music before the performances were reached, and the feeling seemed to be reciprocated. On the afternoon of the last day, when 'The Dream of Gerontius' was to be given in the evening, he sent to each member of the chorus a copy of the following letter:

I wish to express my gratitude to each member of the chorus for the fine singing in 'The Apostles.' At the public concert to-night it is of course not possible for me to say anything, so I take this opportunity to write that the performance was in every way satisfactory and in many points supreme. I look for the same care and enthusiasm in 'Gerontius' this evening, and feel assured that a great performance will be given. This word of thanks must also be my adieu, an adieu regretfully written to my many friends in the Cincinnati chorus. Farewell, and God bless you.

(Signed) EDWARD ELGAR.

The festival concerts were six in number, four containing the choral works on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, and two on the afternoons of Thursday and Saturday, when the schemes were made up of orchestral pieces and solos by the principal singers. The chief of these from a popular point of view was Madame Gadske, who sang such hackneyed airs as Weber's 'Ocean, thou mighty monster,' and the letter rondo from 'Don Giovanni,' and such Wagnerian battle-horses as the final scenes of 'Götterdämmerung' and 'Tristan und Isolde' and the entrance air of Elizabeth in 'Tannhäuser.' Two English singers were called for solo parts in the oratorios—John Coates and D. Ffrangcon-Davies. The tastefulness and intelligence of their singing helped materially in disclosing the heart of Sir Edward's music. Madame Homer, of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, had been engaged to sing the contralto parts of the oratorios, but her health had been shattered by her awful experiences in the San Francisco catastrophe, and the burden fell upon Miss Janet Spencer, of New York, who acquitted herself with rare efficiency in both works. The soprano in the oratorios and also in the ninth Symphony was Mrs. Rider-Kelsey, a young singer whose fine voice and equally fine artistic instincts have opened to her a wide field of usefulness. The remaining solo singers were Charles W. Clark and Herbert Witherpoon. The orchestral list was made up of Beethoven's overture 'Leonore' No. 3 and ninth Symphony; Schumann's Symphony in B flat; Elgar's 'In the South' and 'Introduction and Allegro'; Liszt's 'Les Préludes'; Loeffler's 'Mort de Tintagiles'; Strauss's Serenade for wind instruments; Dvorák's 'Husitzka' overture; Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto grosso; a festival prologue entitled 'Pax Triumphans,' in which the choir of school children introduced a thrilling cantus firmus in the shape of the German chorale 'Nun danket alle Gott'; Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony; the love scene from Richard Strauss's 'Feuersnot'; and the prelude to 'Die Meistersinger.'

It is impossible to rate the value of Mr. Van der Stucken's achievement in connection with the festival too high. He had trained not only the choir, but also the festival orchestra—composed of the Cincinnati organization and a contingent from the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, which raised the band to 100—as thoroughly as it seemed possible to train them, and thus won a fine repute for a factor which at all the previous festivals had no local association. A continuance of the festivals now seems assured, possibly on lines which will do more for musical culture than those pursued hitherto.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

The Malta Musical Union gave a concert in Lamplough Hall, Floriana, on May 17, the programme including Barnby's 'Rebekah,' Beethoven's fourth Symphony and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite. The Society has had an active season, having given six concerts since November, including performances of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' Handel's 'Messiah' (selections), Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music, German's 'Henry VIII.' dances and Haydn's 'Surprise' symphony. It has also assisted at special services at the Collegiate Church of St. Paul with selections from 'The Messiah' and Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' The orchestra is entirely amateur as regards strings, but has had the advantage of voluntary aid in the wood and brass from the band of the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment. Mr. W. S. Robinson is the conductor.

Musical Competition Festivals.

Our columns this month bear witness to the fact that the expansion of the Musical Competition Festival movement shows no sign of abatement.

It has been computed that this year nearly 40,000 individuals have been or will be concerned as competitors in the English festivals alone. It is therefore obvious that the movement is exercising great influence over the progress of music in this country. As the promoters generally are fully alive to the possible dangers of competitions that have no underlying educational aim, it may be regarded as assured that the competitive idea will be kept in due subservience as a means to an end. A safeguard in this direction is the existence of The Association of Competition Festivals, the next annual meeting of which will be held at Messrs. Broadwood's on June 27. While this Association makes no attempt to interfere with local schemes, it is certain to exert considerable influence in shaping the plans of the various festivals and in unifying their aims. We regret that the pressure on our space compels us to give only brief reports of the numerous recent festivals. Further details as to the junior sections and the schools will be found in this month's School Music Review.

TONBRIDGE, KENT.

(April 24 and 25.)

This festival makes a strong feature of concert music. It has not yet achieved the success by way of public support its energetic management deserves, but it has served to stimulate a great number of amateurs in providing them with a motive to practise on proper lines. There were twenty-four entries in the adult choral sections and seven in the junior sections. Watlington and St. Lawrence were very successful in various sections. The music for combined performance included 'Come and thank Him' (Bach), 'In Autumn' (Brahms), 'What voice of gladness' (Parry). Mrs. Swinton sang, the Misses Watts (violinists) played, and Dr. Coward adjudicated and conducted the concert. The Tonbridge Orchestral Society, under Mr. H. C. Steward, of Tonbridge School, made a successful appearance. Prizes were distributed by the Marchioness of Camden. Miss Ruth Wilkinson and the Hon. Violet Mills are secretaries of the scheme.

TROWBRIDGE (WILTSHIRE).

(April 25.)

Some competitions were arranged here in connection with the Wiltshire Arts and Crafts Association. As they were successful it is hoped that they will develop into a special festival. There were thirteen entries in the choral classes and in all 214 performers. The Rev. Dr. Davies was the adjudicator and the Countess of Radnor distributed the prizes.

THE WESTMORLAND FESTIVAL, KENDAL.

As this was the twenty-first festival held in this district, the coming of age was specially celebrated. The first three days were devoted to competitions and concerts on a grand scale, and the fourth day to a concert and the distribution of prizes by H.R.H. Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

The development of the festival during the last decade has been in the direction of increasing the importance of the music for the combined resources with a view to the creation of a musical festival of the Birmingham, Sheffield, &c., type. Miss Wakefield has always made this ideal the objective of her exertions, and it must have afforded her great satisfaction to witness the realisation of her aims. Although the concerts loom so large in the scheme and draw a specially-interested audience, the need for sustaining the competitions is felt strongly. It was therefore gratifying to find that on the present occasion the choral entries were numerous and efficient, notwithstanding the heavy demands made upon choralists in connection with the concert music. On the first day sixteen schools competed in various classes, and there were village bands and instrumental trios by adult performers. In the afternoon the combined choir of 450 voices sang a selection of choruses conducted by Mrs. T. A. Argles (a sister of Miss Wakefield); Miss Evangeline Florence sang, and Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin) played. A large audience was highly pleased, and the festival was happily started. An agreeable incident was a presentation to Mrs. Argles on behalf of the enthusiastic children. Although the adult competitions were spread over two days there was no distinction of grade between the two sets of choirs. Judgment therefore had to be withheld until the third day of the festival. Twenty villages and Kendal itself sent in choirs in classes for female voices, male voices and mixed voices. The singing generally was of a high standard, the experience in past years having converted many of the amateur conductors into experts. Silverdale was first in the village choir section, Carnforth in two mixed-voice sections as well as in the female-voice section, and Kendal Parish Church gained the male-voice prize. Among the tests were the part-song 'My sweet sweeting' (W. H. Bell), the trio for s.s.a. 'Coronach' (Schubert), 'It's oh! to be a wild wind' (Elgar) and the fine madrigal 'Spring returns' (Marenzio). Dr. McNaught adjudicated at most of the competitions, Mr. G. Rathbone taking the sight-singing, and Mr. Cecil Sharp the interesting and useful folk-song competition. Owing to the number of the choralists (about 800) qualified to take part in the evening concerts and the limitations of the Drill Hall in which the festival was held, two separate choirs were set to work on different programmes. Mr. A. H. Willink had acted as chorus-master, and in that capacity had attended over seventy rehearsals during the winter. Mr. Henry J. Wood was, as last year, the conductor, and he had rehearsed large groups some half-dozen times. No pains had been spared to make the festival an artistic success. The admirable result achieved fully justified the immense trouble taken by all concerned. Mr. Wood brought with him his famous Queen's Hall orchestra, and therefore in this department, too, success was assured.

We can hardly do more than enumerate the titles of the pieces performed. At the first concert the following was the programme:

Church Cantata	..	'O Light Everlasting'	..	..	Bach.
Soloists: Mrs. SWINTON, Mr. GERVASE ELWES, Mr. PLUNKET GREENE.
Variations for Orchestra	..	..	..	..	Elgar.
Rhapsody for Contralto Solo	..	..	..	..	Brahms.
(Male-voice chorus and orchestra)
Soloist: Mrs. SWINTON.
Cantata	..	..	'The sun-worshippers'	..	Goring Thomas.
Soloists: Miss AGNES NICHOLLS, Mr. GERVASE ELWES.
Six Songs—	Sung by Mr. PLUNKET GREENE.
Cantata	..	'Ode to the North-east wind'			.. F. Cliffe.
(For chorus and orchestra).

At the second concert 'The Messiah' was given for the first time in the history of the festival. The soloists were those above-named. Mrs. Swinton was the least known, and it is gratifying to record the unquestionable success of her performances at this concert and on the previous evening. Mr. Wood's reading of 'The Messiah' choruses and especially of the Hallelujah chorus was daringly original and the choralists sang con amore. On the fourth day the prizes were presented by the Princess, and a special choir sang in splendid style a fine selection of madrigals and part-songs under Mr. Wood. Mr. Colin Somervell, one of the secretaries, gave an account of the growth of the festival, Dr. McNaught spoke on the competition festival movement in England, and the president, Miss Wakefield, thanked Her Royal Highness for so graciously coming in their midst.

CANTERBURY.

(April 26 and 28.)

This was the second event of its kind in this district. Mr. E. Minshall, of Folkestone, was the originator and he is still the active secretary of the scheme. The adult competitions occupied the first day. In the chief choral section the Cathedral Musical Society set a very good example by entering the lists, and, under Dr. Perrin, they achieved the first place. The Maidstone Ladies' Glee Club (Mr. F. W. Wilson Parish) gained the first place in the female-voice choir class, and the Maidstone men (also under Mr. Parish) were also first in their class. In the Village Society Class, Wingham District (Mr. Alex. Reid) was first. On the children's day ten school classes entered. The most notable performance was that of St. Paul's School, Maidstone (Mr. J. B. Groom), in the two-part song class, the test for which was 'What marks the frontier line?' (Stanford). The Deal Parochial School and Miss Lawrie's Girls' Singing Guild also gained first-prizes in other sections. The adjudicators were Dr. Turpin, Dr. Davan Wetton, Mr. J. E. Borland and Mr. Morton Latham. At the adult evening concert the combined choir and an orchestra were conducted by Dr. Perrin, whose interest in the whole scheme has been a strong factor in its success. The programme included his own choral ballad 'Song of war' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer'; the overture to 'Prometheus' and the 'Casse Noisette' suite were performed by the orchestra. At the children's concert, again conducted by Dr. Perrin, the Cathedral choristers sang 'The yarn of the Nancy Bell,' the words of which are by Mr. W. S. Gilbert and the music by Mr. T. Burton.

THE MADRESFIELD COMPETITION, MALVERN.

(April 28 and 30.)

The eleventh annual Madresfield Musical Competition was held this year in Malvern, and attracted numerous competitors. The mixed-voice choirs were not quite up to the usual standard, but the female-voice choirs were excellent, Worcester High School for Girls (past and present) being awarded first place for the singing of 'Sound sleep' (Vaughan Williams). Some remarkable training was shown by Stourport (Mr. R. A. Taylor), the winners in the elementary school violin class. The school classes combined to perform the cantata 'Vogelweid' (Rathbone), under Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis. Stourport (Mr. G. Jackson) was the successful choir in the class for large choral societies, and Croome (Lady Dorothy Coventry) and Powyke (Mr. G. Street Chignell) tied for the banner for village choirs. Dr. Percy Buck adjudicated, and he conducted a successful performance of Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' by the combined choirs and an orchestra. The choirs, under Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis, also sang Filson Young's motet 'From harmony to harmony.' The soloists were Señor Luis Alvarez, Miss Anne Malvern, Miss Amy Newton and the Rev. A. L. G. Griffiths. Mr. G. Street Chignell was the pianoforte accompanist.

YORK.

(April 30, May 1 and 2.)

The operations of this festival necessitate the devotion of three days to the work. Instrumental performances and particularly chamber music have always been a strong and interesting feature of the scheme. On the present occasion a whole day was given to stringed instruments. Mr. Alfred Gibson was the judge. Five string quartet parties played the first and second movements of Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29); Mr. Horwood's party were the most successful. There were six entries for the Beethoven Pianoforte trio (Op. 1), the party very ably led by Miss Willoughby coming out first.

The village choirs sang on the second day. Four female-voice choirs sang in one section and eight in another. There were nine men's-voice choirs, eight mixed-voice and nine church choirs in other sections. Bishopthorpe, under the Rev. C. Daly Atkinson, carried off several prizes. Londesborough, Church Fenton, Healaugh, Escrick and Wykeham were also successful. At the evening meeting the combined choirs sang, and Dr. McNaught, the adjudicator, gave an address on the development of tone in choir training, and his remarks were aptly illustrated by the choirs on the platform.

The third day was devoted mainly to children. The school entries were not large, but the choirs that came were remarkably good. Brafferton, under Mr. Pincombe Clack, and Harrogate, under Mr. Wade, gave beautiful performances of Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' In a female-voice choir section a Girls' Friendly Society class under Mrs. Trundle gained a first position; in a male-voice choir section, Centenary under Mr. Rymer was successful; and in two other sections, St. Michael's choir under Mr. Fairbourn gained first places. Miss Mary Egerton conducted the combined choirs in a series of choruses which were splendidly sung. The Lord Mayor distributed the prizes.

MID-SOMERSET, MIDSOMER NORTON.

(May 1, 2, and 3.)

The fifth festival for this section of Somerset was held at Midsomer Norton. Previous festivals have been held at Shepton Mallet and Frome. Mrs. Mansel, of Wincanton, was the originator, and she is still the most active organizer of the scheme. Mr. D. C. Wilson-Ewer, the honorary secretary, also contributed largely to the success of this year's gathering. On the first day the juveniles in vocal and instrumental classes were tested, Mr. Basil Johnson and Mr. Cecil Sharp adjudicating. There were thirty-two entries in junior choir sections and twenty-eight in the solo and duet instrumental sections. A concert by the combined choirs was given under the baton of Mr. C. E. Prince. On the second day adult instrumentalists and vocal soloists were tested. Mrs. Knatchbull judged the pianists and Mr. Cecil Sharp the vocalists. On the third day the adult choirs competed and Dr. McNaught adjudicated. There were twenty-seven entries in the choral sections, besides eight mixed-voice quartets. Chewton Mendip, Oakhill, Shepton Mallet, Midsomer Norton and Wells High School (past and present pupils) were prize-winners. An evening concert drew a large audience. Haydn's 'Spring' was performed by the combined choirs under Mr. Sharp's direction. The charming singing of Miss Hilda Foster (Mrs. Bramwell) was one of the most attractive features. The Duchess of Somerset distributed the prizes.

WEYBRIDGE, WEST SURREY.

(May 2 and 3.)

This festival is in its second year; Miss Christian Egerton is the chief promoter. Six school choirs entered, and there were twenty-four entries in the adult choral classes, and two in the village orchestral class. Dr. Somervell adjudicated. At the evening concert given on the second day, Mendelssohn's second Symphony was performed, under the direction of Mr. Ivimey, and Miss Egerton conducted a very good performance of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm.

WENSLEYDALE TOURNAMENT AT LEYBURN, YORKS.

(May 2 and 3.)

This 'tournament of music' was instituted eight years ago by the late Hon. A. Lucien Orde-Powlett. It has exercised considerable influence upon the district within its scope. During the two days there were 112 entries in the various vocal and instrumental classes. The children's day proved to be very interesting. It culminated in a performance of Rathbone's cantata 'Orpheus' by the combined choirs under the direction of Mr. T. Tertius Noble, who was the adjudicator throughout the competitions. The seniors on the second day brought in many small adult choirs and quartet parties. There were twenty classes enumerated in the schedule, but in two (violin and violoncello) there were no entries. The proceedings concluded with a concert at which 'The Revenge' (Stanford) was performed by the more advanced choirs.

BRIGG, NORTH LINCOLNSHIRE.

(May 7.)

The sixth festival in this centre was held with great success. The scheme is promoted chiefly by Mr. Gervase Elwes, now so well known as a singer, and his wife, Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes. Nine church or chapel choirs came, and Ulceby was placed first. There were also good entries in the solo-singing, mixed-voice, quartet and village-choir sections. Waddingham, under Mr. J. Walley, was very successful. The standard of all the singing was good. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. A folk-song competition excited great interest, a group of old men coming forward in turn to sing a series of traditional songs. A ballad entitled 'Six Dukes,' sung by Mr. G. Gouldthorp, gained a prize, and a beautiful tune, 'Brigg Fair,' was also awarded a prize. Miss Lucy Broadwood adjudicated in this section.

The attendance at the evening concert was overwhelming, and the enthusiasm of the audience boundless. The prize-winners performed, and Mr. Percy Grainger played pianoforte solos and conducted some folk-songs which he had effectively arranged for chorus and brass band. Mr. C. W. Cray also conducted the combined choirs. The soloists included Miss Violette Londa, Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Gervase Elwes.

NORTH NOTTS, RETFORD.

(May 7, 8, and 10.)

This was the third festival organized for this centre. Mrs. Herbert Peake was the originator, and is one of the joint secretaries. The scheme is very well supported by the neighbouring gentry. The juniors competed on the first day. Entries were fairly numerous, and the singing was often of the very best quality. East Retford choristers gained a prize in one section, and the Retford Wesleyan choir and the Retford Congregational choir were successful in other sections. The 300 children combined to sing two unison songs under the baton of Mr. T. Hercy Denman. On the same evening there were competitions in flute, clarinet, brass quartet playing, and a class for orchestral bands. The test for the latter class was Elgar's 'Imperial March,' and Mr. Gray's Newark orchestra was the most successful of the three bands that entered. On the second day the villages sent in choirs of all kinds. Tuxford was most successful in the chief mixed-voice choir class, and the Rampton Wesleyan choir in the anthem class.

The choirs combined to sing some choruses again, under Mr. Hercy Denman's direction. On the third day a larger area was appealed to, with the result that some first-rate choirs were attracted. Some of the best singing was heard in the male-voice section, in which Mr. Andrew's Retford choir gained the premier position. The test-piece was Dr. Brewer's 'A ballad when at sea.' Mr. White's Workshop Ladies were the winners in the female-voice choir section, and the Retford Amateur Musical Society in the mixed-voice section. The test-piece was Edward German's 'O lovely May,' and an own-choice piece sung by the winners was 'The vagabonds' (Eaton Faning). A concert wound up the whole festival. The most important item of the programme was the ballad 'Battle of the Baltic' (Villiers Stanford), which was performed by 200 voices and a full orchestra under the direction of Mr. Tertius Noble, the adjudicator throughout the competitions.

LEITH HILL, SURREY.

The second festival was held at Dorking as before, and appears to be making good progress. Miss M. Vaughan Williams is the secretary of a strong local committee formed for the promotion of the scheme. Eight female-voice, eight mixed-voice and six male-voice choirs, and eight quartets competed. There was successful in several sections, and Westcott and Capel also each gained first-prizes. Dr. Somervell adjudicated. The combined choirs, numbering 240 voices, sang at the evening concert. A chorus by Bach, 'Now praise, my soul,' Elgar's 'It comes from the misty ages,' and the final scene from Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' were included in the programme. Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted.

SWALEDALE, RICHMOND, YORKSHIRE.

(May 9 and 10.)

This was the seventh annual festival held in this beautiful country. On the first day junior vocal and instrumental competitions were held. There were numerous entries for pianoforte playing, seven for violin playing, and twenty-three entries in the choir classes. The results were often highly satisfactory. On the second day pianoforte, violin, violoncello and pianoforte, trio, string quartet, and contralto and bass sections for adults were tested. In the choral section there were eight church choirs, three men's-voice, three female-voice, and four mixed-voice choirs, beside thirteen vocal quartet parties. In the anthem class Northallerton parish church choir was the most successful in the six entries, and the Mowbray Chorus was first in the unaccompanied part-song class. Mr. H. A. Fricker, of Leeds, adjudicated and conducted a performance of 'Acis and Galatea' at the evening concert. The Misses C. and M. Yeoman are the secretaries of the scheme.

MORECAMBE.

Notwithstanding the growth of many other festivals recently established in the north-west corner of England this unique gathering is still by far the most important event of its kind held in this country. It leads in the quality of the music selected as tests for the competitions, in the high standard of the choirs that are attracted from a wide area, and in the number of the competitors. The concert music and the artists engaged are also of the best, and the vocal results at least in this department challenge comparison with those attained at the best musical festivals of the ordinary type. The first day was devoted to children's and Girls' Friendly Society competitions. The classes included musical theory, ear-training, sight-singing, pianoforte and violin playing and solo singing for boys and girls. Fifteen schools, three bands of hope, and four Girls' Friendly Societies sent in choirs. Four other schools contributed highly attractive Maypole dances. At a concert the choirs combined to sing a cantata, 'Merrie England' (Roedel), under Dr. McNaught.

On the second day the classes were mostly for local resources, the exceptions being those for male quartets and mixed-voice quartets. There were ten mixed-voice, eight male-voice and ten female-voice choir entries, and six each of male-voice and mixed-voice quartets. The Lancaster Ladies (Mr. J. W. Aldous) gained a first-prize by a beautiful performance of the trio 'The violet' (G. J. Bennett), and the Heysham male voices (Mr. S. Morphet) were equally successful with 'Good-night' (Goetz), the test-piece in their section. Carnforth (Mr. Unsworth) gained the chief position in the mixed-voice class, and Preston St. Cecilia were first in the male quartet class. A class for songs with obligato accompaniment of any instrument in addition to the pianoforte, the choice of piece being left to the competitors, brought forth some music of dubious quality of the sweetly-pretty, death-bed, triplets-and-angels type. A church-choir festival, in which the choirs of thirteen churches took part, was held at St. Laurence Church in the afternoon. The music included Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (Stanford), 'Sing to the Lord' (Tye), 'O great is the depth' and 'How lovely are the messengers' (Mendelssohn). The service was sung by the Rev. H. Dams, Precentor of Carlisle Cathedral, and the sermon was preached by the Bishop of Burnley. Mr. Arthur Davies conducted and Mr. John Whiteside was at the organ. A concert took place in the evening. The most important feature was the fine performance of twenty songs by Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied by Mr. F. B. Kiddle. A novelty was a competition for mixed-voice quartets with four-hand pianoforte accompaniment. The tests were from the beautiful cycle 'A romance of love' (H. Hofmann). The Silsden quartet party gave a charming performance and were awarded the prize. There were only two entries.

The third day was given up entirely to combined rehearsals of band and chorus and to the important evening concert. A special festival choir of 250 voices, drilled under Mr. Arthur Davies, of Morecambe, and Mr. J. W. Aldous, of Lancaster, had been further trained by Dr. Coward in his special way, and a band of eighty performers, consisting of members of the Manchester Hallé Orchestra and Mr. Aldous's Lancaster Orchestra, was also engaged. The chief items of the programme were 'The pilgrimage to Kevlaar' (Humperdinck), 'The Revenge' (Stanford), and 'The Pied Piper' (C. H. H. Parry). These works had been prepared with great care, the choral performance at least often reaching great excellence. Humperdinck's work made a deep impression. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Webster Millar. The two former gave a fine performance of the great duet from the closing scene of 'Eugene Onegin' (Tchaikovsky), and Mr. Millar displayed a light, pleasant voice and an artistic style in a series of songs. Mr. Austin also sang six songs with his usual power of interpretation.

The last day brought a crowd of choralists and visitors from near and distant parts. There were forty-three choirs and four full orchestras. The mixed-voice choirs and the male-voice choirs were each in two sections. In the smaller choir mixed-voice section there were ten entries, some choirs coming from Leeds, Sheffield and Nottingham. The test-pieces were:

'What though I have skill to complain'	.. .. F. Corder.
'Matin song'	.. .. W. H. Bell.
'The hump-backed fiddler'	.. .. Brahms.

Keighley (Mr. G. S. Day) were the victors, Mr. Woolley's Nottingham choir and Mr. Aldous's Lancaster choir coming very close behind. There were thirteen entries for the smaller male-voice choir section. The test-pieces were:

'Break, break'	.. .. Dr. Roland Rogers.
'Majestic night'	.. .. H. R. Bishop.

The Lancaster choir (Mr. R. T. Grosse) was first, Kendal (Mr. Grainger) and Sheffield (Mr. A. S. Burrows) coming second and third respectively. The female-voice class brought forward some first-rate choirs. The tests were:

'Sound sleep'	.. .. R. Vaughan Williams.
'Eglantine'	.. .. A. Jensen.

Blackpool (Mr. H. Whittaker) gained the first place with 152 marks, Barrow (Mrs. Bourne) coming second (150 marks), and Padham (Mr. G. Hitchon) third (148 marks). The orchestras competed in two classes—one for strings and one for full orchestras. There were three entries for strings only, and Mr. C. Townsley's party from Nelson gained the first place. The test was Victor Herbert's Suite for strings (Op. 12). The full orchestras played Weber's overture to 'Euryanthe.' There were four entries, viz., Nelson (Mr. Townsley), Colne (Mr. J. L. Wildman), Hanley (Mr. J. Cope) and Lancaster (Mr. J. W. Aldous). Nelson was again victorious and the Hanley band was a close second. As usual, interest to a large extent centred upon the chief male-voice class and the mixed-voice challenge shield class. In the former class there were only three entries, but these were three of the most highly trained and efficient choirs to be heard in the country. The following were the tests:

'Counsel'	.. .. Spohr.
'After many a dusty mile'	.. .. Elgar.
'Totenvolk' or 'The phantom host'	.. .. Friedrich Hegar.

The first piece is comparatively a trifle, the second piece calls for great daintiness and beauty of expression, and the third piece 'The phantom host,' by Hegar, which was prepared in English specially for the festival, is one of the most impressive choruses ever written for male-voice choirs. The words deal with a grim story of the loss of a Swedish army on the Tydal mountains in 1719. The original poem is by Joseph Victor Widmann. Hegar's music is almost terrible in the intensity of its dramatic expressiveness, and performed as it was on this occasion by such splendid choirs the piece created a profound impression. There was not much to choose between the three choirs in the merit of their performances of this chorus: they varied more in their interpretations of the other pieces. The result was that Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke) was awarded the first place, Habersham (Mr. E. Hitchon) the second with only one mark below, and the Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) a near third. There were eight entries for the challenge shield mixed-voice class, and the four test-pieces were as follows:

(a) 'I follow, lo, the footing'	.. .. Morley.
(b) 'Welcome to spring'	.. .. Moellendorff.
(c) 'An evening scene'	.. .. Elgar.
(composed for the Festival, and dedicated to the late Mr. Howson).
(d) 'Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?'	W. Havergal Brian.

Each choir had to sing (a) and (b) in the afternoon, and five were selected to sing (c) and (d) in the evening. The order of singing and the result was as follows:

	Marks
1. Morecambe Madrigal Society (Mr. A. Davies.)	.. .. 145
2. Isle of Man Choir (Mr. J. D. Looney.)	.. .. 152—148 = 300
3. The Southport Choir (Mr. W. Tattersall.)	.. .. 145
4. Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. H. Ball.)	.. .. 137
5. Burnley Co-operative Vocal Union (Mr. Dan Duxbury.)	.. .. 147—151 = 298
6. Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker.)	.. .. 154—154 = 308
7. Nottingham Tabernacle Temperance Choir (Mr. C. E. Riley.)	.. .. 147—149 = 296
8. Barrow Madrigal Society (Mrs. Bourne).	.. .. 153—156 = 309
The maximum attainable was 320 (80 for each piece).

Last year Hanley (Mr. James) gained the shield, and it was generally regretted that they were unable to come this year. Mrs. Bourne was the recipient of the warmest congratulations from her rivals. The success of her choir is a lesson in the virtue of perseverance. In former years the choir has been quite low down in the list.

The adjudicators throughout the festival were Dr. Walford Davies and Dr. McNaught. Mr. Ivor Atkins was also responsible on the last day, and Mr. C. H. Fogg, besides acting as the official accompanist, adjudicated in some of the pianoforte sections. At the final adjudication Canon Gorton, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Dr. McNaught paid tribute to the memory of Mr. Howson, and Dr. Walford Davies spoke of the general results of the festival. He said he had to guard himself against unqualified admiration, and he pointed out that in the matter of keeping pitch and in over-painting to make 'points,' there was much for many of the choirs to learn.

FARNHAM, SURREY.

(May 15 and 16.)

The fifth annual festival was held here with success, although the support it receives comes mainly from the surrounding districts rather than from the town itself, which indeed seemed to be hardly aware of the event. The scheme has the great advantage of the experienced and active assistance of Mr. Morton Latham and Miss Fordati, the secretary, is also a strong force. The first day was given up to the juniors. There was a fair number of entries, although epidemical illness prevented groups from appearing. All the work submitted had been faithfully prepared and exhibited good capacity. The Girls' Grammar School (Mr. B. F. Ramsay), the Girls' National School and the Shaftesbury School all took first-prizes in various sections. The cantata 'The frogs and the ox' (Wensley and Bridge) was performed by the combined choirs under the direction of Mr. Latham. Lady Arkwright distributed the prizes, one of which was given by Mr. Arthur Balfour. On the second day seven female-voice choirs, five male choirs and eight village choral societies competed. The Farnham Town Choral Society (Mr. B. F. Ramsay) also sang, and earned high commendation not only for their prepared pieces but also for their sight-singing. Two string quartet parties played the 'Emperor's hymn,' air and variations, by Haydn. The party led by Miss Hamel, which included Mrs. Morton Latham (violin), gave a very artistic performance and were awarded the prize. The rendering of music by the combined resources is happily regarded as an essential feature of the festival. This year the first part of 'St. Paul' and the cantata 'The song of Balder' (C. H. Lloyd) were performed with the assistance of an orchestra, and of Mrs. Montgomery and Miss Clifford Cunliffe as soloists. Both works were performed with great effect under the firm direction of Mr. Morton Latham. Dr. McNaught was the adjudicator.

PONTEFRACT, YORKS.

(May 15, 16, 17.)

The fourth festival here passed off very successfully. Mr. F. S. Hatchard is the active president and Mr. Oswald Holmes, the Rev. C. Daly Atkinson, of Bishopthorpe, and Mr. F. G. Leatham are hard workers in the cause. There were 194 entries, a record number notwithstanding a falling off in the school sections. About half-a-dozen school centres sent in soloists, duettists and choirs. These and instrumental competitions were heard on the first day. On the following day village choirs and numerous soloists appeared. Some of the tests were taken from Barnby's 'Rebekah,' the work chosen for combined performance. In the chief choral class the Badsworth Society was placed first. At the evening concert 'Rebekah' was performed by the combined choirs accompanied by a full orchestra and conducted by Dr. Coward, who adjudicated throughout the three days' competitions. On the third day the larger towns and villages were allowed to enter. There were fourteen different classes in the schedule. The male-voice choirs provided the most interesting singing, Pontefract choir (Mr. Walker) gaining the first place. The Parish Church choir also sang remarkably well and were victors in the chief church and chapel choir section, and the Pontefract Ladies' Choir were first in their own section. Monkfryston was first in the chief mixed-voice choir class. A great crowd was attracted to the final concert. The principal item was the dramatic cantata 'Hero and Leander' (C. Harford Lloyd). This was performed by the combined choirs and full orchestra under the direction of Dr. Coward. The soloists were the prize-winners of the day's competitions.

THE WANSBECK COMPETITION (MORPETH, NORTHUMBERLAND).

(May 19.)

This is a new festival promoted in the first instance by Major Orde, a resident in the district. A very good beginning was made. The school choirs exhibited some painstaking training, and the adult choirs at least the precious quality of enthusiasm. Nearly all the singing was well in tune and in some cases there was commendable refinement in the execution. There is no doubt that with the encouragement afforded by this festival the promising potentialities of the district may be highly developed. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

Dr. Roland Rogers adjudicated at the Chester Eisteddfod reported in our May issue.

Other competitions have been held at Dublin (The Feis Ceoil), Spilsby (Lincolnshire), Whitby (Eskdale), Northampton, Hexham (Northumberland), Petersfield (Hants), and Reading (Berks, Bucks and Oxon). These will be recorded in our next issue.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

'The study of the history of music; a consideration of the prevailing methods of study and a plea for the adoption of more rational ones' was the subject of the paper read by Dr. Frederick G. Shinn at the meeting held at Messrs. Broadwood's Rooms on May 15.

The lecturer first of all drew attention to the valuable contributions which in recent years had been made by Englishmen to the literature bearing upon the history of music, and also to the very large number of lectures which were now given upon different aspects of the subject. He then contrasted this activity in historical research and in the dissemination of this kind of knowledge to every class of musically-inclined person with the small amount of real historical knowledge which is possessed by the average music student or the average music teacher. The cause of so much ignorance and indifference to the systematic study of this subject he attributed (1) to the adoption of loose, unmethodical and irrational methods in studying the subject and (2) to the superficial treatment of the subject in musical examinations. Dr. Shinn insisted that unless historical knowledge was a superstructure built upon a foundation of the knowledge of music of the periods and composers under consideration, such knowledge, so far as training the mind and influencing the judgment of the student is concerned, was worthless.

The memorization of names and dates and of opinions about music, the nature and form of which is unknown to the student, profiteth nothing. He strongly condemned certain examinations in which questions were habitually set referring to music belonging to periods of which the average candidate who sat for such examination could not possibly have any personal knowledge. He then briefly sketched out a scheme of study in which the student was gradually led through musical biography to feel an interest in different musical forms, and from thence to study the historical development of such forms, but always in connection with the music itself.

Dr. Shinn showed how, viewed from the highest standpoint, musical history was merely a branch of general history, and that it could not be intelligently understood without frequent reference to the facts of such non-musical general history. Examples of time charts were shown which would help the student in such matters. The lecturer concluded by an appeal to those who set examination papers in this subject to issue in their syllabus a list of representative works of different periods and styles with particulars of the publication of such works, and to insist upon candidates possessing at least a reasonable knowledge of the music which they were asked to discuss. The adoption of such a course would limit the periods upon which questions could be set, especially to young students, but it would help to make the study of history a real and effective instrument of education instead of what it at present so largely is, a mere cramming of the memory with names, dates and second-hand opinions referring to music, of which the student has no knowledge and probably will never see even so much as a title-page.

THE OPERA.

The grand opera season at Covent Garden commenced on May 3 with 'Tristan und Isolde,' and during the first fortnight two Cycles were given of 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' conducted by Dr. Hans Richter. The principal artists engaged were Frauen Wittich, Gadsby, Reinl, Knüpfer-Egli, Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Fräulein Ternina, and Grimm; and Herren Burger, Konrad, Anthes, Jörn, Lieban, Nietan, Whitehill, Knüpfer, Braun, Zador, Raboth, and Van Rooy. It cannot be said that any of the exponents of Tristan, Siegmund, or Siegfried satisfactorily met all the requirements of these characters, but otherwise the impersonations attained a high standard. Special features were the deeply impressive embodiments of Isolde and Brünhilde by Fräulein Ternina, and the beautiful singing of Madame Kirkby Lunn as Brangäne and Erda. The orchestral playing was magnificent, and the chorus of Valkyries was splendidly sung by a company including five English artists, namely Madame Agnes Nicholls and the Misses Gleeson-White, Edna Thornton, Edith Clegg and Winifred Ludlam. Mention is also due of the admirable stage management, and particularly of the dragon, much the best fighting beast hitherto seen at Covent Garden.

On May 11 the first performance in England was given of M. Edward Poldini's one-act opera 'Der Vagabund und die Prinzessin.' The composer was born in Hungary in 1869 and the above work was originally produced at Budapest in 1904. The libretto, by Herr A. F. Seligmann, is based on Hans Christian Andersen's fairy-tale 'The Swineherd,' but the chief incidents are considerably altered in the opera, the Prince, who woos the disdainful Princess, sending her a rose bush covered with blooms, instead of a single rose, and disguising himself as the showman of travelling marionettes instead of a swineherd. The Princess is so delighted with the puppet-show that she wishes to buy it, but the Prince will only consent to part with it for a hundred kisses. To this the Princess consents, but being discovered by her father as she is fulfilling the transaction she is banished from the royal palace and the Prince ungallantly remarks, 'To scorn is turned your lover's adoration.' The music, as befits the subject, is extremely dainty, melodious and refined, but lacks individuality. The best numbers are the Prince's song 'Fairest rose,' a minuet played while the court ladies chatter to the Princess, and the strains accompanying the marionette show, the last-named consisting of a quaint little tune and variations, some of which are humorously scored for xylophone, piccolo, toy trumpet and rattle. The work made a favourable impression, but is somewhat too light in character for so large a house. The cast consisted of the King, Herr Braun; Prince, Herr Jörn; Princess, Fräulein Burchardt; Astrologer, Mr. Frank Arthur; Ambassador, Herr L. Nietan. It should be added that the conductor on this occasion was Mr. Percy Pitt, who held this responsible position for the first time at Covent Garden at the special request of Dr. Richter, whose confidence the English musician fully justified.

The little work was followed by the first performance at Covent Garden of 'Der Barbier von Bagdad' by Peter Cornelius. This work, originally produced at Weimar at the insistence of Liszt in 1858, was written on Wagnerian lines, and proved such a pronounced failure that Liszt thereupon resigned his position at Weimar. Re-scored by Herr Mottl, the opera was revived at Carlsruhe in 1884, and subsequently became so popular on the Continent that it was performed (for the first time in England) by the pupils of the Royal College of Music at the Savoy Theatre on December 6, 1901. The music is characteristic, melodious and humorous, and Herr Mottl's scoring brings the work up to date. The story is that of 'The Tailor' in the 'Arabian nights,' and its humours were vivaciously set forth by Herr Jörn, Nureddin; Herr Knüpfer, Abul Hassan; Herr Nietan, Mustapha; Herr Zador, the Caliph; and Fräulein Burchardt and Grimm, who severally personated Morgiana and Bostana. The work, conducted by Dr. Richter, was very well received.

Concerning the other operas, it is sufficient to say that M. Altchewsky, a new-comer, created a favourable impression in the title-rôle of 'Faust' on May 10, when Mlle. Donalda appeared as Marguerite; that Signor Caruso reappeared as the Duke in 'Rigoletto' on May 15; and that Madame Melba joined the cast as Mimi in 'La Bohème' on May 17. Other characters in these operas were sustained by Mesdames Das, Paulin, Siva and Parkina, Signor Scotti, MM. Gilibert, Journet and Seveilhac, and Mr. Frank Arthur. 'Faust' was conducted by M. Messenger, and 'Rigoletto' and 'La Bohème' by Signor Campanini.

THE GIRLS' SCHOOL MUSIC UNION.

THIRD ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The third annual conference of this useful Union, the object of which is 'the advancement of music in secondary schools for girls throughout the British Empire and the discussion of matters connected therewith,' was held on May 5 at the Guildhall School of Music, Victoria Embankment. There was a large attendance. Dr. W. H. Cummings presided in place of Mr. W. H. Hadow, the president, who was unable to be present. Miss Cecilia Hill, who shares the duties of secretaryship with Miss Mixer, read the annual report, in which it was stated that the scheme for providing schools with concerts of educational value had been very successful, and that the subject of the formation of a lending library was under consideration. Mr. W. H. Hadow was re-elected president for the ensuing year. Dr. Cummings, dealing with the question of 'The training of taste,' which was to have formed the subject of Mr. Hadow's presidential address, observed that taste was a matter of education and environment, and must be entirely influenced by what people were accustomed to. In cultivating taste it was necessary to take the best and acknowledged models of the past and study them. The modern product should be measured by these standards. A paper was read by Miss Emily Daymond on 'Practical methods of teaching theory and harmony in schools,' in which she pleaded for a more systematic, practical and rational way of teaching harmony than usually obtains in schools, and she advocated the teaching of counterpoint before harmony. In the course of discussion Mr. Terry (Westminster Cathedral) stated his agreement that counterpoint should come first and Dr. Cummings said he considered that both branches should be taught together. A paper was also contributed by the Rev. E. H. Fellowes on 'Some thoughts on the teaching of the violin in girls' schools,' and Mr. Plunket Greene gave a trenchant address on the subject of the choice of songs.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE TONIC SOL-FA COLLEGE.

THE SHEFFIELD MUSICAL UNION AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The thirty-first annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa College, held at Queen's Hall on May 14, was made specially notable by the appearance of the 300 chorals of the Sheffield Musical Union under Dr. Coward. It was a bold enterprise to risk the great expense of bringing this magnificent choir to London, and we regret to add that the patronage of the public was meagre and disappointing. The choir however seemed not to be discouraged, for they sang with all the brilliancy, force and technical perfection that have earned for them and their trainer a world-wide reputation. It was perhaps an advantage that there was no band to distract the attention or to dwarf the tone of the choir. The only accompaniment consisted of two pianofortes (Mr. G. F. Cawthorne and Mr. J. F. Staton) and the organ (Mr. W. S. Jessop). The programme included four choruses from 'The Messiah,' four from 'Elijah,' the Sanctus from Bach's B minor Mass, the opening chorus from 'Everyman' (Walford Davies), the choral ballad 'John Gilpin' (Cowen), the dance from 'Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands' (Elgar), the madrigal 'In going to my lonely bed' (Edwards) and 'You stole my love' (W. Macfarren), which was announced as a 'new madrigal'! As we have already stated the choir sang with splendid effect. To our thinking they were at their best in Bach's great Sanctus, the climax in which was thrilling, and in the impressive chorus from 'Everyman.' The audience, fit though few, was naturally enthusiastic. Miss Eleanor Coward sang four songs and exhibited a well-trained voice and style.

The inwardness of the appearance of the choir at this tonic sol-fa gathering is that the members are trained largely by means of the tonic sol-fa system in which Dr. Coward is a thorough believer. In a lively address Dr. Coward stated that the first basis of the choir was sight-singing power, and that they were all dual notationists. It was part of the scheme of training to provide sol-fa classes for staff readers and staff notation classes for tonic sol-fa readers.

The chair was taken by Lord Stanley of Alderley. Short addresses were given by the Right Hon. Stuart Wortley, (one of the Members of Parliament for Sheffield), Mr. J. S. Curwen (the president), and Mr. W. Harrison, the College secretary, read a report which stated that 21,831 certificates had been granted during the year.

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

THE 166TH SEASON.

The ladies' night at the Madrigal Society is always a special occasion, but probably no previous meeting of its kind was more successful or enjoyable than that which took place at the Holborn Restaurant on May 17. On the dinner we need not dilate further than to say that it served admirably to induce goodwill to all men and to the members of the other sex who graced the board. The programme of music consisted of a choice selection of madrigals and part-songs which were sung by the members assisted by the Westminster and other choristers, and all under the sympathetic direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, except that Sir Charles Stanford conducted his own dainty part-song 'Phœbe.' The presence of Mrs. P. S. Hughes (née Miss de Pearsall), a daughter of a composer held in high regard by all lovers of madrigals, lent renewed interest to the fine settings (by Pearsall) of 'Light of my soul' and 'Take heed' which were in the programme. Mr. J. E. Street, the president, who so long and so efficiently discharged the duties of hon. secretary, was in the chair, and the guests included Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. D. W. Rootham, of Bristol, and many well-known members of the musical profession.

Joska Szigeti, another Hungarian violinist prodigy, made his first appearance in England at Bechstein Hall on May 24, with the usual success.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL EVENING SCHOOLS.

CHORAL UNION CONCERTS.

HACKNEY AND FINSBURY.

Enthusiasm on the part of the huge audience and, in no less measure, of the full-voiced choir, characterized the fourth musical festival of the Hackney and Finsbury Evening Schools Choral Union at the Alexandra Palace on Saturday evening, April 28. A chorus of 1,500 voices and an orchestra of 150 performers joined their forces in giving a good account of their winter's work in a feast of music. The chief features of a lengthy programme were Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm ('As the hart pants') and Macfarren's 'May-day.' Good tone and attack were shown in the Psalm, some of the movements in which were in our opinion taken too quickly; but the singers loyally responded to the baton and seemed thoroughly to enjoy their self-imposed task. The orchestra were no less earnest in their endeavours, but the players have some considerable leeway to make up before they can take rank with their choral colleagues; patience, perseverance and time, however, will work wonders under competent guidance. We were greatly pleased with the unaccompanied part-singing as exemplified in Pintsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls,' in which the large body of voices followed the conductor with commendable intelligence, and in Eaton Faning's accompanied part-song 'The miller's wooing' the words were well enunciated. The soloists were Miss Alice Motterway and Mr. Samuel Masters, while Mr. G. C. Richardson officiated at the organ, and Mr. Allen Gill again demonstrated his skill as a conductor of large forces.

NORTH-WEST LONDON.

The Union of thirteen evening school classes performed Mendelssohn's setting of the 95th Psalm, 'Come, let us sing,' and the same composer's 'First Walpurgis night,' at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway, on May 5. The choir of 300 singers exhibited careful training and gave an effective performance of both works and some unaccompanied part-songs. The band was not so satisfactory, although it included some good performers. Mr. H. P. Dakin conducted with considerable firmness, and he had evidently earned the confidence of his forces. Mr. G. T. Pinches was the organist.

WEST LONDON.

At Queen's Hall, on May 10, the Choral Union of the West London Evening Schools (650 voices), conducted by Mr. W. T. Oke, performed the whole of Haydn's 'Creation.' Here also the bass, both in chorus and orchestra, needed more body, though all did their best. The amateur orchestra was led by Mr. T. J. Milne, Dr. H. W. Richards was at the organ, and the soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss May Skinner, Mr. William Green and Mr. Ben Grove.

WEST LAMBETH.

Under the conductorship of Mr. George Lane the West Lambeth Choral Union, at Battersea Town Hall on May 11, sang Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast,' a selection from Bennett's 'May Queen' and various part-songs with great spirit, yet with due regard to light and shade. Miss Elsie Harrison led an amateur orchestra of fifty players—the total number of performers was 300—and the concert gave evident enjoyment to all concerned—those who sang and played and those who listened.

The Eastern section of this Choral Union—band and chorus of 230 performers—performed the same programme at the Surrey Masonic Hall on May 5, with results that reflected credit on all who took part and upon Mr. Charles Metcalf, the skilful and popular conductor. Clearness of enunciation, good tone, and certainty of attack were features in the choral singing which merit praise.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.

On Saturday evening, May 12, the South-East London Evening Schools Choral Union held its fourth annual festival concert at the Great Central Hall, Tower Bridge Road, in the presence of an audience—including the Mayors of Greenwich, Lewisham and Southwark—that completely filled the vast auditorium. The band (led by Mr. W. Waghorn) and chorus, ably conducted by Mr. A. G. Gibbs, numbered 500 performers, and Mr. Maurice A. Child and Miss Florence Fryer presided at the organ and pianoforte respectively. It is a question whether this Choral Union was wise in selecting Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and performing it without the symphony, except the opening Maestoso section, especially as the orchestra left something to be desired; but the choralists sang the familiar strains with much brightness and not a little vigour. One missed a perfect balance of parts as the sopranos greatly predominated and the bass was of that baritonic quality common to London: still such earnest endeavour and true love for music deserve high commendation, and the results of many enjoyable practices should be full of encouragement to all who take part in these gratifying music-makings. Certain shortcomings in the orchestra—e.g., the opening phrase of the 'Hymn of praise' symphony played on the pianoforte with the bass trombone, and assigning to the pianoforte the solo horn parts in 'I waited for the Lord'—should be made good on future occasions, as no doubt they will when greater experience and knowledge are attained by those responsible for the musicianship of so worthy an enterprise. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Mr. Alfred Kenningham and Mr. Harry Dearth.

EAST LONDON.

Queen's Hall, not in Langham Place, but at the People's Palace, Mile-End Road, was the scene of the third annual musical festival of the East London Choral Union on May 17. Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's-day' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' furnished the chief choral works, in which contingents from twenty-four schools creditably took part under the conductorship of Mr. G. Day-Winter. The orchestra (under the baton of Mr. T. Jarvis) played some pieces and the choir sang several choruses and part-songs with care and much acceptance.

The movement of which the above concerts are the outcome deserves hearty encouragement, and the references in the above notices to any weak spots are made in the spirit of friendly criticism and with a desire to further the artistic aims which should, and indeed do, animate those who interest themselves in so good a cause.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The chief feature of the concert on May 2 was the re-appearance of Herr Ernst von Dohnányi, who played with all due effect the solo part of his Pianoforte concerto in E minor, first performed in England at a Richter concert (St. James's Hall) on October 23, 1899. The opinion on the concerto expressed in these columns at that time remains unchanged after a second hearing, clever as the work undoubtedly is. A new-comer, Mr. Franjo Naval, the possessor of a well-trained and sympathetic tenor voice, made a favourable impression in an aria of Mozart and songs by Brahms and Massenet; and the purely orchestral items in the programme were Schumann's 'Manfred' overture, Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro for strings,' and Beethoven's ever-welcome C minor symphony.

Distinction marked the concert on May 17 by the appearance of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, who distinguished themselves, and fully upheld the splendid traditions of Yorkshire chorus-singing, in Bach's Motet for double chorus 'Sing ye to the Lord,' and in the choral portion of Beethoven's ninth Symphony, which closed a concert lasting very nearly three hours—much too long. The evening's music opened with Hermann Goetz's 'Im Frühling' overture—how much his music is neglected!—and included Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G, of which the solo part was beautifully played by Mr. Richard Buhlig. Dr. Frederic Cowen conducted both concerts which were given as usual at Queen's Hall. Some information concerning previous performances by the Philharmonic Society of Beethoven's Choral symphony will be found on page 387.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and the first and second parts of Haydn's 'Creation' formed the programme of the eighth concert of the Royal Choral Society given at the Royal Albert Hall on May 3. The lofty conception and broad phrases of Sir Hubert's setting of Milton's lines make this example of his genius an ideal work for the conditions prevailing in the vast auditorium. The choristers seemed to feel this, for they sang with splendid precision and verve, and the climaxes were worked up with such power and rich volume of tone that most enthusiastic applause was elicited, which the composer was compelled to acknowledge. The familiar choruses from the 'Creation' were also delivered with exhilarating effect and the solos were admirably sung by Miss Nannie Tout, Mr. William Green and Mr. Harry Dearth. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with his usual decision and skill.

JOACHIM COMMITTEE CONCERTS.

Two of the pleasantest of recent music-makings have been the pair of extra concerts given under the above auspices at Queen's Hall on April 28 and May 12, and this notwithstanding the fact that so large a building is unsuited for an ideal interpretation of chamber music. On the first occasion the programme consisted of Brahms's B minor quintet (Op. 115) for clarinet (superbly played by Prof. Richard Mühlfeld, for whom Brahms wrote the part) and strings; Mendelssohn's rarely heard Octet (for strings); and a most delightful Octet serenade in E flat by Mozart (Köchel No. 375), for four pairs of wind instruments—oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons—charmingly played by Messrs. W. M. Malsch, E. Davies, Richard Mühlfeld, M. Gomez, A. Borsdorf, H. Vandermeersch, E. F. James and Wilfred James, the fascinating little gem being conducted by Dr. Joachim with evident enjoyment.

Three chamber-music classics furnished much pleasure to the audience at the second concert: Beethoven's Quintet in E flat (Op. 16) for pianoforte and wind instruments; Brahms's Quintet in B flat (Op. 18) for strings; and Schubert's Octet for strings and wind. The players on stringed instruments who took part in one or both of these concerts were Dr. Joachim, Prof. Carl Halir, Mr. Maurice Sons and Mr. Thomas F. Morris (violins); Mr. Alfred Gibson and Mr. Alfred Hobday (violins); Prof. Robert Hausmann and Mr. Percy Such (violin-cellos); Mr. C. Winterbottom (double-bass, in Schubert's Octet) and Mr. Donald Francis Tovey (pianoforte). We regret to record that Prof. Emanuel Wirth, the viola player of the Joachim Quartet, had to return to Berlin because of an eye trouble; but, as heretofore, Mr. Alfred Gibson proved himself a worthy substitute.

DR. GRIEG IN LONDON.

The appearance of Dr. Grieg at the head of the Queen's Hall Orchestra attracted an enormous audience to Langham Place on May 17, and the liveliest appreciation was shown of the popular composer's readings of a selection of his works. The most remarkable feature of the afternoon was the performance of the Pianoforte concerto in A minor, with Miss Johanne Stockmarr at the pianoforte. This lady played with all needful strength and brilliancy, and the reading was much more dramatic and intense in expression than is usually presented. The music acquired greater significance, and as the composer was conducting this interpretation it will probably be accepted as the model one, although it is very different from Dr. Grieg's own rendering of the pianoforte part. Great interest also attached to the performances of his 'Lyric' suite, orchestral versions of his pianoforte Lyric pieces (Op. 54), and the first 'Peer Gynt' suite. The soft passages in these works were given with fascinating delicacy, 'Anitra's dance' being played with the utmost pathos. Mlle. Antonia Dolores sang three of the composer's songs, accompanied by the orchestra, and Miss Tita Brand gave an extremely dramatic recitation of Bjornson's 'Bergliot' with Dr. Grieg's picturesque orchestral accompaniment.

A Grieg chamber concert was given with equal success at Queen's Hall on May 24.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At the concert on May 5 the potentialities of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony were overpoweringly made manifest in all their neurotic forcefulness at the hands—literally the hands, as he conducts without a baton—of the composer's fellow-countryman, M. Wassili Safonoff. If this forceful Russian musician was not quite successful in securing true fairy-like daintiness in Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture, or failed sufficiently to poetise Beethoven's eighth Symphony, he again substantiated his claim to be ranked among the most masterful of orchestral conductors.

On May 19 Dr. Frederic Cowen occupied the conductor's desk, when he secured an excellent rendering of his best symphony ('The Scandinavian'), and played the pianoforte (as a substitute for the harmonica) in an Adagio and Rondo by Mozart for harmonica, flute, oboe, clarinet, viola and violoncello. Schumann's 'Genoveva' overture, Tchaikovsky's Suite in G (No. 3), and a German dance in C (for strings) by Schubert completed an interesting and enjoyable afternoon's music. Both concerts were given at Queen's Hall.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The chief feature of the Symphony Concert given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra on May 5 was the performance of the symphonic poem 'Don Quixote,' conducted by its composer Dr. Richard Strauss. The nature of this work is such that some musicians may have rejoiced and others may have grieved that there were a good many empty seats, for the influence of music is undoubted, and opinion is much divided concerning the artistic value of Dr. Strauss's orchestral works and 'Don Quixote' in particular. The rendering bore witness to assiduous rehearsal, and praise is due to the instrumentalists, who with manifest zeal tried to meet the composer's requirements. The remainder of the concert consisted of the overture to 'Tannhäuser,' with the Venusberg music, Beethoven's eighth Symphony and three excerpts from Berlioz's 'Faust,' this selection being conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood.

The programme of the concert on May 10 was with one exception devoted entirely to Wagner, the exception being Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, the solo part of which was entrusted to Mr. Harold Bauer, who in giving a remarkably virile and significant reading of the romantic music was most sympathetically supported by the orchestra under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction.

THE HANDEL SOCIETY.

At the concert given by the Handel Society at Queen's Hall on May 23 a new work by the conductor of the Society, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, was produced. As its title, 'Kubla Khan,' implies, the novelty is a setting of Coleridge's dream-poem, for contralto soloist—well sung by Miss Edna Thornton—chorus and orchestra. Naturally cast in a rhapsodical mould and richly scored—the orchestra literally playing an important part in the composition—the work also contains much that furnishes excellent opportunities for the chorus, which they eagerly embraced. At the close of the cantata the composer-conductor was heartily applauded. The second part of the programme consisted of Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride,' in which Madame le Mar, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Albert Garcia were the soloists.

MR. JAMES ALBERT MALLINSON'S RECITALS.

'There is so much distinctiveness and originality in Mr. Mallinson's songs that they should be welcomed by all cultured vocalists capable of appreciating endeavours to break through petrified conventionalities in musical phrases.' Thus said THE MUSICAL TIMES on Mr. Mallinson's early efforts, and succeeding years have justified the opinion. It is a bold thing for a composer to give four vocal recitals of his own works, but the series commenced on May 8 at Bechstein Hall has justified the enterprise. With himself at the pianoforte and his wife—formerly Madame Anna Steinhauer the Danish soprano—and Miss Ada Crossley singing his songs, Mr. Mallinson must have enjoyed himself quite as much as did the audiences, for his lyrics were most charmingly sung and most cordially received. At the first recital the most memorable songs were those entitled 'A Birthday,' 'Slow horses, slow,' and 'Snow-flakes,' sung by Mrs. Mallinson; and 'Eleanore,' 'Four by the clock,' and 'O danke nicht,' interpreted by Miss Crossley. These compositions are real lyrical gems which may be compared in artistic worth and style to the songs of Schubert. At his second recital (on May 15) Miss Crossley was most successful in 'Der Jäger Abschied' and 'Over the Western sea,' the harmonic scheme of the latter being particularly striking. To Mrs. Mallinson were entrusted a dramatic setting of Sir Lewis Morris's poem 'Courage' and Mr. Norman Giles's 'Rosebud,' the latter a ditty of fascinating grace and melodious charm.

VARIOUS CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

Mr. Jan Mulder introduced two novelties at his concert at Salle Erard on May 1—a Clarinet quintet in B flat by Mr. Louis Zimmermann, and a song-cycle entitled 'Five lyrics by Shelley,' composed by the concert-giver. The Clarinet quintet is an agreeable and well-written work, the two most attractive movements of which are the second and third—respectively an Andante based on an expressive melody and a Scherzo of fanciful and piquant character. The strings were played by the composer and Messrs. G. S. Robinson, John Ansell and Jan Mulder, and the clarinet part was entrusted to Mr. O. Hill. The song-cycle includes Shelley's poem 'The fountains mingle with the river,' which has most happily inspired Mr. Mulder.

M. Maurice Dambois, a young Belgian violoncellist, born at Liège on March 30, 1889, made his first appearance in England on May 4 at an orchestral concert given by Mr. and the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford at Æolian Hall. M. Dambois entered the Liège Conservatoire at the age of ten, three years later obtained the first-prize for violoncello and pianoforte playing, and two years afterwards received the gold medal for his proficiency on the former instrument. He plays with great facility and artistic perception, but although showing decided talent cannot yet be called a finished artist. Mr. Clifford conducted with conspicuous skill, and the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford sang several songs with great charm and purity of style.

To honour the seventy-third anniversary of the birthday of Brahms two concerts were given in London on May 7, one by the Joachim Quartet at Bechstein and the other by the London Trio at Æolian Hall. The programme of the former consisted entirely of works by this master, and included the famous Clarinet trio—with Prof. Mühlfeld as clarinettist and Miss Fanny Davies as pianist—and the Quintet in F. The selection by the London Trio included the Trios in C (Op. 87) and C minor (Op. 101), which were admirably played by Madame Amina Goodwin, Signor Simonetti and Mr. Whitehouse. Nothing but praise can be given to the instrumentalists for the interpretation of these masterpieces. The programme at Æolian Hall was varied by the singing of a number of Brahms's songs by Miss Amelia Holding. Each hall was filled with an enthusiastic audience.

The programme submitted by Madame Harriet Solly and Mr. Luard-Selby at Æolian Hall on May 9 included the first performance of a Pianoforte quintet by Mr. Selby. The work comprises four movements, all of them written with commendable terseness. The themes are not remarkable for pristine beauty, but the slow movement is a fascinating section and the Scherzo possesses character. The quintet was excellently played by Madame H. Solly, Misses Mary Noverre, Sybil Maturin and Ethel Nettleship, with the composer at the pianoforte. The vocalists were Mr. Walter Ford and Master F. G. Robinson, senior chorister at Rochester Cathedral.

An interesting concert was given at Æolian Hall on May 10 by the Folk-Song Quartet, a party of vocalists consisting of the Misses Beatrice Spencer and Florence Christie, and Messrs. L. Godfrey and Foxton Ferguson. The selection was comprehensive and commendable, albeit some of the arrangements of the traditional airs were not always consistent with the simplicity of the tunes. Amongst the most successful achievements of the Quartet were the 'Song of the Sickle,' 'My love is far away,' and 'Do, my love, as others do,' from Mr. Percy Godfrey's collection of traditional Russian tunes; and eight 'Nursery Rhymes' composed by Dr. Walford Davies, the latter ditties being sung for the first time and proving very bright examples of their genre.

Miss Ethel Hopkins, one of the many new violinists that this season has brought forth, is a pupil of Mr. Johannes Wolff and Mr. Wilhelmj. At her concert—Æolian Hall, May 10—she showed marked ability in a vivacious and clear rendering of the solo part in Max Bruch's Concerto in D minor, and produced an excellent tone from her instrument. Other works given in a no less satisfactory manner were Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen,' and a 'Romance' by Wilhelmj. The fair violinist was sympathetically assisted by the London Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Charles Williams.

Record should be made of the first appearance in England on May 11 at Steinway Hall of a wonderfully gifted Polish boy pianist, Miecio Horszowski. He was born in 1894 and made his début at Vienna in 1900; the following year he gave recitals in Berlin, Warsaw, Geneva, Madrid and Lisbon, and two years ago gave four concerts in Paris. His executive skill is extraordinary, but what is more remarkable is the sentiment and poetic feeling he infuses into his renderings of the great masters, his interpretations of Chopin being particularly charming. He gave a second recital in the same hall on May 18.

Mr. Boris Hambourg, the remarkably clever young violoncellist—assisted by his brothers Mr. Mark and Mr. Jan Hambourg, and Baron F. D'Erlanger, Dr. Plimmer, Miss Lucie Hillier, Miss Audrey Chapman and Messrs. W. E. Whitehouse, Herbert Walenn and E. van der Straeten—commenced on May 12 an important series of five historical violoncello recitals at Æolian Hall. The selection of pieces and works was remarkably comprehensive, and with one or two exceptions were original compositions for the instrument.

Herr Ferencz Hegedüs was heard at his best at Æolian Hall on May 15, when, accompanied by an efficient orchestra conducted by Mr. René Ortmans, he played the solo part of Mozart's Violin concerto in D (Köchel No. 218) and rendered several solos in an artistic and sympathetic manner.

M. Reynaldo Hahn gave a recital of his own compositions on May 16 at Bechstein Hall, when he sang two of his own songs as well as acting as accompanist to Mr. Léon Rennay, who was the chief exponent of Mr. Hahn's compositions.

Madame Edith Hands and Mr. William Waite gave a successful vocal recital at Bechstein Hall on May 23, when they presented a varied programme of songs and airs from oratorios and operas. Madame Edith Hands has an established reputation and Mr. Waite gave abundant proof that he is the possessor of a well-trained baritone voice.

The London Choral Society repeated their performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' at Queen's Hall on May 22, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge.

Mr. Claud Biggs, who gave a pianoforte recital at Æolian Hall on May 24, has a delicate touch and plays with true artistic perception, his phrasing being particularly good. A well chosen programme added to the enjoyment of the afternoon's music.

BACH MEMORIAL CONCERT.

Aided by liberal donations and benefit concerts, the Neue Bach Gesellschaft has paid a sufficient sum towards the purchase of the birth-house of Johann Sebastian Bach at Eisenach, whereby possession has been secured. The house will now be converted into a Bach Museum, wherein will be gathered everything—autographs, printed editions, instruments, pictures, &c.—that can be collected relating to the great Cantor. To further aid this noble scheme a memorial concert was given at the Æolian Hall on May 1. The programme, consisting of sacred and secular music, exhibited in miniature, so to speak, the various ways in which Bach displayed his mighty genius. The short but expressive cantata for contralto solo, 'Schlage doch, du gewünschte Stunde,' was sung by Miss Maria Philippi, and an aria from the church cantata 'Selig ist der Mann' by Mrs. Henry Wood, while secular vocal music was represented by the clever and interesting Drama per Musica 'Phœbus and Pan.' The instrumental music consisted of the second Brandenburg concerto, the Chaconne for violin—exceedingly well performed by Mrs. Edgar Speyer—and the Suite in B minor for flute and strings, with Mr. A. Fransella as an excellent soloist. Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted the concert, together with the solo artists—those already named, and Miss L. Wormald, Messrs. H. Turnpenney, H. Wilde, F. Ranałow and F. Austin—all generously gave their services. Some points in the performances were open to criticism, which however on such an occasion would be quite out of place. Altogether it was an enjoyable evening, and the full hall showed how much interest had been taken in music so far removed in style from that of the present day. Those who wish to join in the completion of this interesting Bach memorial are invited to send their donations to Messrs. Speyer Brothers, Lothbury, E.C., who will gladly acknowledge any amounts that may be sent to them.

The enormous number of concerts and recitals given in London during the past month compels us, owing to considerations of space, reluctantly to forego notice of several events of artistic merit.

Suburban Concerts.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society gave the final concert of the season at the 'Star and Garter' Assembly Rooms on April 25. The chief features of the programme were Haydn's 'Spring' ('The Seasons'), Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and Grieg's 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' suite. Sir Hubert Parry's vivacious cantata was enthusiastically received. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. Stewart Gardner. Dr. Charles E. Jolley conducted.

The Oakland's Choral Society, Uxbridge Road, gave a performance of Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' on April 25. Miss Ruby Dubbins and Mr. F. Weitzel were the solo vocalists. Mr. Leonard Hart presided at the organ, and Miss F. L. Ade was the solo pianist. Mr. Alfred G. Woodham conducted.

The Streatham Choral Society's second concert this season took place at Streatham Hall on April 30, when a very successful performance was given of Bennett's 'Ancient Mariner.' Bridge's 'Rock of Ages,' Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave' and Mozart's 'Splendete Te, Deus' were also included in the programme. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss May Peters, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Sullivan. The choir and orchestra of 180 performers were alike satisfactory, and Dr. Cuthbert Harris conducted.

The Stonebridge Park and Harlesden Choral and Orchestral Society gave its concluding concert of the season at the Constitutional Hall, Harlesden, on May 1, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed. Miss Lilian Turnbull, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. Harry Long were the principal soloists, and the minor part of the Queen was taken by Miss Ethel Badrick, a singer of considerable promise. Mr. Walter Marlow conducted.

The Streatham Hill Choral Society gave its second concert this season at Streatham Hall on May 2, when the programme comprised Hofmann's 'Melusina,' Cliffe's 'Ode to the north-east wind,' and Bridge's 'Flag of England.' The choir sang throughout with spirit and vigour and the orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Dyson) left little to be desired. Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Gertrude Macaulay, Mr. Charles Mott and Mr. Harry Dearth were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Edwin J. Quance conducted.

The programme of the Richmond New Philharmonic Society's eighth concert this season on May 2 comprised Brahms's 'Requiem,' MacCunn's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' and Grieg's 'Landerkenning.' Mr. MacCunn's cantata met with a very favourable reception. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Radburn and Mr. Leonard Rogers, and Mr. James Brown conducted.

The programme of the Beckenham Orchestral Society's concert on May 14 included Suppé's overture 'Poet and peasant,' Mozart's Symphony in G minor, the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto (solo, Mr. George Mackern) and Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor (solo, Mr. George Wilby). The vocalist was Mr. Claude Dyer, and the orchestra (led by Mr. Edward O'Brien) was conducted by Mr. George Wilby.

Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' were successfully performed at the New Lecture Hall, East Finchley, on May 14, under the direction of Mr. G. R. Ceiley. The performance was given in aid of the All Saints' organ repair fund, and the choir included members of the East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society and others. The choir had been well trained, and there was an efficient orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Fred Hard.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

May 15, 1906.

After Easter there is usually a break in the continuity of public concerts; this year, however, there have been some excellent and inspiring music-makings, their programmes showing steady growth in the endeavour to cultivate public taste. The combined forces of the Singakademie and the Choral Society of the railway officials gave a magnificent performance of Brahms's 'Requiem.' The work was conducted by Ferdinand Löwe, the artistic director of the Concert Society, who is greatly admired for his conducting of modern compositions, especially those of Brahms and Bruckner, whose music he has thoroughly grasped. By way of introduction the 'Tragic' overture was performed, a work the mood of which was quite in keeping with that of the 'Requiem.' In another grand concert the Vienna section of the International Music Society and the Vienna capella choir combined and gave a programme of an instructive and historical nature. There were old compositions, vocal and instrumental, the former including German and Italian madrigals. The excellent choir was under the direction of its founder, Eugen Thomas.

A travelling company, the Choral Union of Moravian Teachers, gave a concert with a highly original programme: charming little songs of varied character, for the most part by Slavonian composers, little if at all known outside their native land. These songs proved what a wealth of musical talent is scattered throughout Moravia and Bohemia.

The oldest male choir of Vienna, and indeed of Austria, the 'Wiener Männergesangsverein,' is making preparations for its visit to London, where an Austrian exhibition has been opened. In Austria the Society enjoys the highest reputation, and in many foreign countries it has been received with enthusiasm; only recently a visit was paid to Cairo. The Society represents to the utmost the art of choral singing as practised in Vienna, and the members belong to the best circles of Viennese life.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On April 25 Mr. Willy Lehmann, a talented violoncellist resident here, gave a concert in the Masonic Hall, introducing the Norwegian violinist Miss Elsa Wagner, who created a favourable impression. Madame Marie Fromm was the pianist, and the principal feature of the concert was Arensky's Trio in D minor, performed In Memoriam. The vocalist was Madame van Oostveen, who made a successful local début.

The Handsworth Amateur Orchestral Society gave a Beethoven concert in the Town Hall on April 26. The programme included the second Symphony, the fourth Piano-forte concerto (soloist Mr. G. H. Manton), the two Romances for violin, played by Miss Gertrude Fuller, who received her training at the Institute School of Music, and the 'Prometheus' and 'Coriolan' overtures. Mr. Ripley Evans, the vocalist, contributed Beethoven's 'Adelaide,' and other songs. Mr. Johann C. Hoeck conducted.

On April 28 was concluded a season of opera in English, the like of which Birmingham rarely enjoys. The Turner Opera Company, at the Grand Theatre, during their three weeks' stay, performed Balfe's 'Satanella,' 'Bohemian girl,' 'Puritan's daughter,' Benedict's 'Lily of Killarney,' Bizet's 'Carmen,' Auber's 'Fra Diavolo,' Wallace's 'Maritana,' and other operas. At the Theatre Royal the Moody-Manners Opera Company gave several of the works just named and introduced Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin,' which was performed twice with great success. Wagner's 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhäuser' were also given.

A season of promenade concerts was commenced at the Theatre Royal on May 14, extending to three weeks. Mr. Landon Ronald conducts an orchestra of seventy performers, local players reinforced by members of London and other organizations. The programmes are high-class and varied, and among the novelties already introduced are a Berceuse by Armas Järnefelt, the Finnish composer, and 'Symphonic pictures,' a suite in four movements by August Enna, performed for the first time in England on May 18. The series is under the direction of Mr. Max Mossel.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Spring concert of the Bristol Young Men's Christian Association Choral Society was held in the Association Hall on April 23, and there was a large attendance. Mr. J. F. Barnett's 'Paradise and the Peri' obtained a creditable rendering, the principal vocalists being Miss Eveline Gerrish, Miss Katharine Gerrish, Miss Lallie Hodder, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. Arthur Wills. There was an orchestra composed of local players, and Mr. W. A. Barter directed the performance.

On April 25 the Knowle and Totterdown Choral Society gave a concert, the works performed being Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's-day' and Macfarren's 'May-day.' The soloist was Miss Winifred Thomas. The band was led by Mr. Maurice Alexander, Mr. E. L. Moore was at the organ, and Mr. C. A. Inman at the piano-forte. Mr. G. Herbert Risley conducted, and the large audience appeared much gratified with the interpretation of the two cantatas.

The St. John's Choral Society performed Gaul's 'Una' at the Parochial Hall on May 8. The principal singers were Miss Eveline Gerrish, Miss Mabel Jackson, Mrs. Edith Linnett, Miss Mabel Cole, Mr. H. E. Marchant, Mr. J. Barker and Mr. Claud Venn. Mr. Harold Bernard led the band and Mr. A. E. Hill (organist of St. John's church) conducted.

At the concert given by the Clevedon Philharmonic Society on May 9 at the Public Hall good interpretations were secured of the second act of Gluck's 'Orfeo' and Stanford's 'Revenge' under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook. The music of Eurydice was sung by Miss Mary McCheyne, and that of Orpheus by Miss Elsie Webb. A band, chiefly composed of Bristol executants, was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner.

Knightstone Pavilion was crowded on May 10, when the Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society performed Elgar's 'King Olaf' with Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Arthur Walenn as soloists. Bennett's 'May Queen' was also given with the same vocal principals, and Miss Kate Townley who sang the music of the Queen of England. Mr. F. S. Gardner led the band, and Mr. Edward Cook conducted praiseworthy performances.

MUSIC IN DEVON AND CORNWALL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is very gratifying that a decided spurt has to be recorded in musical matters in many parts of Devon and Cornwall, which by their cornered geographical position are somewhat tempted to adopt the same attitude when difficulties resulting from this isolation threaten to obstruct progress in art. These welcome signs of renewed vitality have been seen in the formation of new Societies, and the introduction of new works into the répertoires of those already at work. That the second half of the season's achievements has borne good fruit the following résumé of events will show.

THE THREE TOWNS.

In the Three Towns' history of instrumental music, an event which probably will mark an epoch has been the organizing of a new Symphony orchestra for the cultivation of standard instrumental music. The initiative was taken by two or three enthusiastic amateurs early in March, and an almost complete orchestra has been formed with Mr. H. Moreton as conductor, Mr. R. H. V. Ball as deputy-conductor and Mr. Alfred Serle as leader. Little beyond organization could be accomplished this season, but the band has held several excellent rehearsals, of which the result will be proved next season.—At a concert held at Plymouth College on February 12, a capable orchestra led by Mr. Alfred Serle gave the first performance of a rhapsody by Mr. Walter P. Weekes, who conducted. Cleverly orchestrated, the piece involved two well-defined themes with descriptive accompaniment and showed modern tendencies in its development.—At a concert given by the Royal Artillery string band under Mr. R. G. Evans, on February 15, Miss Helen Sealy gave a highly artistic rendering of Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto, and the band played Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture almost perfectly.—Mr. Frank Winterbottom has taken a new departure in the programme of his Symphony Concerts at Stonehouse and has twice introduced a new modern work, on which occasions he has relinquished the baton to the composer. Special interest attached to the first occasion on February 21, for the composer then present was the Baroness Overbeck, a Russian lady of highly imaginative and intellectual musical cult. Her 'Antigone' overture, a prelude, 'Phèdre,' for strings and harp, and 'Danse Russe,' were wonderfully full of realism, even viewed from the point of view of Russian characterization.—On March 27 Mr. Ernest Blake produced an original Scherzo, 'Alice in Wonderland.' Mr. Blake is a Yorkshireman by birth who has studied in the Strauss school in Germany, but his music evidences much depth of original and experimental thought and facility of expression.—The 'Dumka' quintette of Dvorák for piano-forte and strings was played for the first time in Plymouth at a chamber concert given on April 19 by the Misses Smith, who had as colleagues Mrs. H. R. Freeman, Messrs. R. Ball and A. Serle; Beethoven's C minor Sonata for piano-forte and violin was also played. Miss Florence Smith gave highly artistic renderings of Brahms's Intermezzi 6 and 3 and Rhapsodie (Op. 119), and Mr. Robert Chignell sang songs by Hugo Wolf and Korbay.—Turning to choral music the chief event was the performance of 'Elijah' by the Guildhall Choir, with a band led by Mr. John Pardew under the baton of the borough organist Mr. H. Moreton, a performance distinguished by the attainment of certain effects which though perfectly legitimate are frequently overlooked. The chorus reached the high-water mark level of excellence and the principals were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Gertrude Macaulay, Mr. Philip Newbury and Mr. Charles Knowles.—The Mutley and Mannermead Choral Class—who deserve a word of commendation for their efforts to perform high-class and unhackneyed works,—in spite of the difficulties which harass a newly-formed choir—gave on February 15 good renderings of Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' and Hamish MacCunn's 'The lay of the last minstrel,' conducted by Mr. Manley Martin, with Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. G. S. Meadows as principals. —Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' was introduced to Plymouth by Dr. Weekes's Choral and Orchestral Societies on April 21 under advantageous conditions, and an instrumental programme included the 'Pathetic' symphony and two movements of the 'Italian.' Dr. S. Weekes and Mr. Walter P. Weekes shared the duties of conductor. —Emmanuel Choral Society, formed last autumn for the cultivation of sacred music only, gave on March 14 Maunder's 'A song of thanksgiving,' and on April 12 Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' Mr. R. Waddy conducting. —Ebenezer Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. David Parkes, acquitted themselves well in Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria' on April 5; and Devonport Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. John Williams, gave concerts on February 22 and April 4. —A Society for the study and performance of opera has recently been revived by Mrs. Herring-Mason, and a highly enjoyable representation was given of 'Fra Diavolo' on April 17.

EXETER AND NORTH DEVON.

The Festival of the Western Counties' Musical Association was a distinct success on April 25, and an increase of interest was perceptible among the contingents from the seven country districts. A recital of 'Faust' (Gounod) was creditable, with Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Winifred Ludlam, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Walter Belgrove and Mr. William Higley in the solo parts. The choir entered with zest into a first performance in the West of Cowen's 'John Gilpin'; and Stanford's 'Sea-songs' were given by the male chorus with Mr. Higley. The band was led by Mr. John Pardew and Dr. D. J. Wood conducted. —Mr. R. B. Moore conducted the Devon Ladies' String Orchestra on February 22 in pieces by Wilson and Henselt, and Señor Arbos and Miss May Harrison played Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins with string accompaniment. —The chorus-singing of the Barnstaple Musical Society always affords a musical treat by reason of its freshness and clear intonation, and the performances of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Elgar's 'The banner of St. George' on April 23, conducted by Dr. H. J. Edwards, were highly enjoyable. At this concert were sung by Mr. Henry Plevy and Florence Holderness a set of Indian songs by Mr. Hubert Bath, a native of Barnstaple. —It is with gratification that we record the resuscitation of the Ilfracombe Choral Society after a suspended animation of two seasons. Mr. Sidney Harper is responsible for the revivifying process, and through his determined efforts 'Judas Maccabæus' was brought to a performance on March 22, when Dr. Edwards conducted; Bennett's 'May Queen' and 'The song of the Vikings' were given on May 1, with Mr. Harper in command. May all success attend the revived Society. —Mention only can be made of concerts given by the North Devon Orchestral Society (Herr Carl Kopsel, conductor) on February 22, by the Bideford Amateur Musical Society (Mr. Henry Hackett) on February 22, and by the Southmolton Choral Society on April 4.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Torquay Musical Association takes a high place in the estimation of music lovers. Though not a large chorus meets under the baton of Mr. T. H. Webb, the standard of performance, judged from executive and interpretative points, is invariably eminently artistic, and this was again evidenced by their performance on April 9 of Dvorák's 'Requiem,' with Madame Sobrino, Miss Bertha Salter, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Arthur Woodbridge as soloists. —Ellacombe (Torquay) Choral Society gave its first concert on February 15, introducing Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe conducting. —St. Marychurch and Babbacombe Choral Society (conductor Mr. W. L. Twining) performed Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on February 7. —At a concert given at Torquay on April 5 by the Royal Artillery string band, Plymouth (Mr. R. G. Evans, conductor), Miss Helen Sealy greatly impressed the audience by her musicianly interpretation of Wieniawski's Violin concerto. —Mr. Harry Crocker's orchestral class, assisted by the Haydn String Quartet, gave a concert on April 19 at Torquay. —A new class formed at Tavistock by the Rev. H. Leigh Murray justified its existence on February 26 in a performance of Romberg's 'The lay of the bell.' —A very useful Choral Society is that conducted by Mr. Raymond Wilmot at Exmouth, who performed 'The Golden Legend' (Sullivan) with conspicuous artistic and financial success on April 18. Sidmouth Choral and Orchestral Society, conductor Mr. J. A. Bellamy, performed Haydn's 'Creation' on April 24.

Other concerts worthy of note are: Bovey Tracey St. John's Choral Society on January 24, ('The wreck of the Hesperus'), Mr. W. Black, conductor; Ottery St. Mary Choral Society on February 19 (Cowen's 'St. John's Eve'), Mr. R. A. Ebdon, conductor; Totnes Choral Society on February 27, conducted by Mr. Herbert Worth; Dartmouth Orchestra and Male Choir on March 19, conducted by Mr. H. J. Sowton; Moretonhampstead Choral Association on March 20, conducted by Miss Esther West; Revelstoke Choral Class on April 18, conducted by Miss E. M. Reade; Ashburton Choral Society (95th Psalm), on April 25, Mr. H. O. Jones, conductor; Brent Choral Society ('Maritana') on April 25, Mr. David Parkes, conductor; Madbury Choral Class on April 25 (Mr. Walter Weekes, conductor); Teignmouth Orchestral Society on April 26, conducted by Mr. A. J. James.

CORNISH TOWNS.

Launceston Choral Society gave a good performance on February 15 of 'Samson,' conducted by Mr. C. S. Parsonson, with Miss Kate Cherry, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Messrs. H. Stubbs and Charles Knowles as principals. —The energetic little Choral Society at Looe chose Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' for performance on February 20, conducted by Mr. Harold Blake, with Madame Mary Poole and Mr. F. Bidgood as soloists. —At Helston on February 27 'St. Paul' was given by the local Choral Society, conducted by Mr. G. Quintrell, the solo parts being taken by Madame Mary Poole, Messrs. Will Foster and Harry Smith. —Gounod's 'Solemn Mass' was given at Camborne under the baton of Mr. H. V. Pearce on March 22. —Lostwithiel Choral Society performed Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's-day' on April 17. —This half-season's record must include two concerts given at Bodmin, one on February 16 by the Nonconformist Choirs Association and Mr. Lamerton's Orchestral Society, when Bridge's 'The ballad of the Clampherdown' was given; the other on April 18, when the Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. A. H. Baker, performed 'The Creation,' with Madame Lucie Gillespie, Messrs. Charles Saunders and Sydney Woodward as principals. —Sullivan's 'The Prodigal Son' was successfully given by the St. German's Choral Class on April 18, the chorus reflecting much credit on the conductor, Mr. R. R. Glendinning. —The Choral Society at Liskeard excelled all past records in their performance of 'Elijah' on April 20, when Mr. A. C. Faull conducted and Madame Lucie Gillespie, Miss Alletha Truscott, Messrs. Charles Saunders and G. S. Meadows were the soloists.

Concerts were given by the united Choral Societies of Truro and Falmouth in Truro on April 23 and in Falmouth on the following day, Mr. H. Sanders conducting; Penzance Choral Society (conductor Mr. Richard White) gave Haydn's 'Creation' on January 12, and Barnett's 'Ancient mariner' and Sullivan's 'Choral song of peace' on April 25; Torpoint Choral Association gave a creditable rendering, on April 25, of Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' Mr. A. Greet conducting.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On April 30 and five following days the recently-formed Amateur Operatic and Choral Society gave performances of Gounod's 'Faust' and Balfe's 'Bohemian girl,' with full band and chorus of a hundred voices, in the Theatre Royal. Mr. Barton McGuckin, the conductor of the Society, and all concerned are to be congratulated on having successfully carried through an extremely difficult undertaking.

Mr. Vincent O'Brien's choir gave a performance of Mozart's twelfth Mass at the Rotunda.

Miss Katharine Malone, who gave a successful concert in the Antient Concert Rooms on May 10, is a young singer who, having made good progress in her studies at the Royal Academy of Music in London, has returned to her native town of Balbriggan, near Dublin. At this her first concert she was assisted by Miss Alicia Keogh, Mr. Robert Harrison and Mr. Gerald Ewing (vocalists), and Miss Madeleine Moore (violinist).

On May 7 a complimentary concert was given to Miss Victoria Delany, one of our most popular violinists, on her retirement from the professional platform. Almost all the principal professionals in Dublin took part, and there was an overflowing audience.

The Feis Ceoil will be noticed in the July issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' at the Cheltenham Town Hall on May 9 attracted a very large audience and reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. C. J. Phillips, the able director of the Philharmonic Society. Miss Stella Robinson (a pupil of Mr. Phillips) took the part of Senta, Mrs. Bartholomew that of Mary, Mr. Penderel Price those of Erik and The Steersman, Mr. Betts that of Daland and Mr. Charles Tree the rôle of The Flying Dutchman.

Two performances of the 'Hymn of Praise' and 'Hiawatha's wedding feast' were given at Dursley in the afternoon and evening of May 16, under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Williams. The soloists were Miss Margaret Hicks Beach, Miss G. Williams, Miss Embrey and Mr. Ranson (of Gloucester Cathedral). The band and chorus numbered over eighty and the performances were well attended and greatly enjoyed.

The last concert of the season of the Gloucester Choral Society was as usual arranged by the president, Mr. Joseph Bennett, and took place at the Shire Hall on May 22. The large number of artists who gave their services included Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Marie Motto (violin), Mr. Charles Manners, Mr. J. Bardsley, Miss Gertrude Ess (violin-cello) and Mr. Patrick Munro (reciter).

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gentlemen's Concerts frequently play for us the opening voluntary of the season, but seldom the closing one. They have done so this season; for to secure for the subscribers the now rare pleasure of welcoming Dr. Joachim, as well as of hearing his famous Quartet, the final concert was postponed from March 19 to April 25. The greeting accorded to the great violinist was warmly enthusiastic. The programme consisted of Mozart's Quartet in G (Köchel 465); Schubert's Quartet in D minor, No. 6 (with the 'Death and the Maiden' theme); and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat major (Op. 74). The playing of Dr. Joachim and his colleagues—Profs. Halir, Wirth, and Hausmann—was distinguished by remarkably sympathetic unity and grace of expression. At the annual meeting of the subscribers held on May 16 it was decided that the Society's library of some four hundred volumes should, under conditions as to user, be transferred to the municipality. It will form a valuable addition to the Henry Watson Music Library already in the possession of the corporation.

The Beethoven Society, with its amateur orchestra of some eighty performers, conducted by Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell, gave the second of its Subscribers' Concerts on April 23, and brought its eighteenth season to a successful close with a really capital performance of Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 2 of the Salomon set). The novelty of the programme was a movement, designated a Nocturne, from the Sibelius suite, 'King Christian II.' Miss Amy Dobson, a very promising pupil of Miss Olga Neruda at the Royal Manchester College of Music, played Saint-Saëns's Piano-forte concerto No. 2, in G minor. Miss Jessie Young, the vocalist of the evening, is also a student at the College. We may say here that the season's Brodsky Quartet concerts have resulted in the contribution of £133 to the College Students' Sustentation Fund, and that the widow of the late Mr. C. J. Heywood—whose interest in the College was referred to in my January notes—has given the College a donation of £1,000 for the establishment of a scholarship in memory of her late husband.

There was an interesting vocal recital on May 2 of pupils of Miss Bertha Guthrie, a local singer and teacher. Miss Guthrie herself took part in it, and its artistic value was enhanced with Chopin selections played by Mr. R. J. Forbes.

At the annual meeting of the Hallé Concerts Society the chairman, Mr. E. J. Broadfield, sketched the scheme of next season's concerts, of which six are to be choral and fourteen orchestral. We are to hear the third part of Elgar's 'Apostles', and the directors will preserve tradition with performances of the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah.' Dr. Richter will of course conduct both here and at the Gentlemen's Concerts.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two choral organizations, the Newcastle and District Catholic Choral Society and the Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society, gave their concluding concerts of the season on April 25. The former sang praiseworthy Haydn's 'Imperial' Mass, Miss Mabel Manson, Madame Gell and Messrs. F. Fallas and D. Shallard being responsible for the vocal solos. Mr. N. H. Brown accompanied on the organ, and Mr. E. J. Rogers conducted. The Tynemouth Society ventured on more modern ground by performing (with orchestra) Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride.' The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, and Messrs. A. Nichol and R. Burnett. Mr. M. Fairs conducted.

Two smaller Societies farther up the Tyne—at Ryton and Hexham—gave their concerts on April 23 and May 4 respectively. The former gave Parts I. and II. of 'The Creation' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' with orchestra (conductor Mr. A. H. Nichol), and the latter Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' with strings, pianoforte and American organ (conductor Mr. E. Brentnall).

The Durham Musical Society—under the direction of the cathedral sub-organist, Mr. W. Ellis—included Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' in their programme of May 10. Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Lilian Buckley and Mr. G. H. Brierley were the soloists.

At the second gathering of the Newcastle Classical Concert Society, Mr. Francis Harford gave a vocal recital—a novelty in this district. His artistic and finished interpretations of songs by Schubert, Schumann and Vaughan Williams, together with some Somerset folk-songs, delighted the audience. Miss E. L. Mathews accompanied.

Our local choral world is evidently undergoing a crisis at present. In addition to the resignation of Mr. J. M. Preston the conductorships of the Newcastle Postal Telegraph and Philharmonic Societies have been resigned by Messrs. J. Hutchinson and G. Dodds respectively. The latter gentleman, however, has been prevailed upon to remain in his position.

Dr. Henry Coward has been appointed conductor of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union in succession to Mr. J. M. Preston. The Gateshead Vocal Society and Newcastle Co-operative Choral Society have both been disbanded.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The two principal recent musical events have been the concerts of the Norwich Philharmonic Society and that of Mr. Arthur Bent's String Orchestra. The first-named took place in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on May 10, when a concert performance was given of Gounod's 'Faust.' The principals were Miss Susan Strong, Miss Mauran, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. William Higley and Mr. Frederic Austin. The Philharmonic Society was associated on this occasion with the Choral Society, resulting in an excellent performance which attracted a very large audience. Dr. Bates kept his forces well in hand and the concert was altogether a great success.

On May 17 Mr. Arthur Bent gave his annual concert which proved one of the most enjoyable of the season. The programme included Tchaikovsky's Serenade for string orchestra (Op. 48); Mozart's Cassation for strings, and 'Intermezzi, Goldoniana' (Op. 127) by M. E. Bossi (first performance in England), while two violin solos by Spohr and Wieniawski were played by Mr. E. Ludwig von Weeks, the Norfolk Scholar at the Royal College of Music. Miss Lefroy was the vocalist and sang several songs in finished style. The Saturday Popular Corporation Concerts came to an end on April 28, when the Mayor, Sheriffs and Corporation attended and the vocalists included Miss Mildred Jones (contralto) and Mr. Albert Garcia (baritone) whose singing excited much enthusiasm. Dr. Bunnett, the director of these concerts, is to be congratulated on a very successful season.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society has a proud record of new works introduced to the city, and at the Spring concert held on May 8 further additions were made to the list. A triple bill was headed by Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' a work of abounding interest and one already immensely popular with choral societies. The full strength of the Society, some 300 executants, was conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers, who shares with Mr. Henry J. Wood the directive control of the Society. The sparkling cantata was cleverly sung by the choristers, who realized with complete success the descriptive and dramatic aspects of the music. An expressive performance of Sir Charles Stanford's 'Last post' created a deep impression, and a successful concert terminated with a spirited rendering of Mr. Frederic Cliffe's breezy and tuneful 'Ode to the North-east wind.' The orchestra played with distinction Tchaikovsky's 'Slavonic march' and Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture. Mr. J. W. Phillips, the Society's gifted accompanist, played some organ solos, and the vocalists were Miss D. Hemmings, Miss F. Riden, Mr. T. W. Green and Mr. H. G. MacLaurin. Next season the Society will perform 'The Apostles' for the first time in Sheffield.

The Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave an interesting miscellaneous concert on April 28. A new part-song by the conductor Mr. A. S. Burrows, entitled 'How sweet thy modest light,' and performed for the first time, is a well-written composition and sincere in feeling. The Sheffield Part-song Choir, which Mr. Charles Jessop has founded, reported progress in a successful concert given under his direction. A new Society has been formed for the purpose of studying grand opera and augmenting the chorus of the Moody-Manners Company upon their next visit to Sheffield. Ultimately the members hope to give performances on their own account. Mr. Duffell is the conductor.

The Sheffield Musical Union and the Leeds Choral Union will join forces and make a short tour in Rhineland during the coming autumn, when Düsseldorf, Essen and Cologne are to be visited. 'The Dream of Gerontius' and some unaccompanied part-songs, &c., will constitute the programme, and Dr. Coward will conduct.

MUSIC IN WORCESTERSHIRE.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

At a meeting largely attended by musicians from all parts of the county held in Worcester last November under the presidency of Sir Edward Elgar, the Worcestershire Orchestral Society was formed. Many well-known amateur and professional instrumentalists were enrolled as members, and enthusiasm and success were predicted when the services of Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, were secured as conductor. It was not perhaps quite a surprise to those who knew of the thoroughness of the rehearsals that had been held during the last few months that the first concert of the Society—given in the Public Hall, Worcester, on April 26—was a brilliant success and fully realized the hopes that had been raised at the inaugural meeting. Beginning with the 'Rienzi' overture, the orchestra not only gave evidence of magnificent tone, but of being composed of both skilful and musicianly players. In Schumann's E flat ('Rhenish') symphony, Dvorák's 'Slavonic' dances, Elgar's Serenade in E minor (Op. 20) for string orchestra, and 'Pomp and Circumstance' march No. 1, the members of the new Society were tested severely; but that from first to last all these works were interpreted in a manner which would have been most creditable to an experienced professional orchestra reflected the highest praise on their able conductor Mr. Atkins. Madame Mary Conly, the possessor of a rich soprano voice, sang with much acceptance 'Elizabeth's greeting' ('Tannhäuser') and 'Ernani, Ernani, involami' (Verdi). A very large attendance testified to the interest the formation of this Society has created in the county, and after such a brilliant start it is not difficult to forecast a successful future for this addition to the musical interest of Worcestershire. It is worthy of note that in the orchestra of a hundred and ten players only nineteen, chiefly wind instrumentalists, were not members of the Society.

The Worcester Festival Choral Society fully maintained the reputation it has gained of late years under the zealous guidance of Mr. Ivor Atkins. At the concert given in the Public Hall, Worcester, on April 19 a varied programme had been arranged, which included 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry), 'Landerkenning' (Grieg), Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar). The masterly setting of 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' received a vigorous and intelligent interpretation by both orchestra and chorus under the inspiring conductorship of the composer Sir Hubert Parry, and the soli parts were admirably sung by Mr. Seth Hughes and Mr. William Higley. The latter, who has become a favourite in this district, also sang two musicianly songs entitled 'Too late' and 'Thou art come,' composed by Mr. Atkins; both vocalist and composer (who accompanied the songs) received enthusiastic recalls for ideal interpretations.

The Musical Society gave its second concert this season in the Public Hall on May 1, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' were performed. Both choir and orchestra did their work satisfactorily, and the solo vocalists were Miss Amy Kendal, Mrs. W. T. Potter and Mr. R. Leonard Brown. Mr. William Dyson was an able conductor.

Foreign Notes.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

The programme of the eighty-third Lower Rhenish Musical Festival on June 3-5 is to consist of Bach's B minor Mass and orchestral Suite in C (first day); Schumann's 'Manfred' overture, Brahms's Violin concerto (M. Marteau) and 'Harzreise' Rhapsody for contralto solo (Frl. Philippi) with chorus of men's voices, and Liszt's 13th Psalm and 'Faust' symphony (second day); Berlioz's overture to 'Benvenuto Cellini,' Beethoven's 'Leonore' overture (No. 3) and E flat Pianoforte concerto (Miss Katharine Goodson), Wagner's 'Meistersinger' Vorspiel, besides songs for tenor solo with orchestral accompaniment, and 'Traumnacht' and 'Sturm-hymnus' for chorus and orchestra by Weingartner (third day). The last-named will discharge the duties of conductor in conjunction with the local Musikdirektor, Prof. E. Schwickerath. Besides the soloists already named, Frau Bosetti of Munich, Herr Burrian of Dresden, and M. De la Cruz-Fröhlich of Paris (formerly 'Mr.' Fröhlich of London), are engaged. It is pleasant to know that our excellent English pianist will appear at these historic festivals.

AMSTERDAM.

A new symphony 'Aan mijn Vaderland' (To my Fatherland) by a local composer, Bernard Zweers, was in spite of its length—it filled the entire programme!—very favourably received when performed recently by the Mengelberg orchestra.

BARMEN.

At the fifth Philharmonic concert, under Herr Hühne, a symphonic poem by Alexandre Berun, bearing the sanguinary title of 'Le massacre de Wassy,' was performed for the first time in Germany. The title opens up charming possibilities to composers, and a suggestion for a 'Massacre' cycle of symphonic poems may safely be expected to appeal to a large number of very young composers anxious to be unmistakably up to date.

BERLIN.

Felix Weingartner bid farewell to Berlin and to the Royal Orchestra at the tenth and last Symphony concert on May 7. The programme included two works by French composers, no doubt as a compliment to the nation which had just received him so enthusiastically in connection with the Paris Beethoven-Berlioz festival. These compositions were Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un Faune' and Bruneau's 'La belle au bois dormant.' They were followed by Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, and after one of the greatest of Beethoven's works, in which Weingartner himself has ever been at his greatest and on this occasion absolutely surpassed himself, viz., the 'Eroica,' the concert ended amid scenes of indescribable enthusiasm. For a quarter of an hour by the clock the huge audience vociferously expressed their appreciation of the splendid work Weingartner has done in the German capital since 1891, and their profound regret that the hour of an 'irrevocable' farewell had struck. Many 'Auf Wiedersehen' and 'Wiederkommen' resounded through the Royal Opera House, and no doubt made the wrench of saying good-bye to his many friends particularly painful to the hero of the splendid ovation. Who knows whether his 'Farewell' is after all not 'irrevocable'?—Engelbert Humperdinck is engaged on some music to Shakespeare's 'Tempest,' with which play the Neues Schauspielhaus, at present in course of construction in the Mollendorf-Platz, will be opened.—A Handel Festival is announced to be given on October 25, 26 and 27, under the protectorate of the Crown Prince. On the first day 'Israel in Egypt' will be performed by the Philharmonic Choir, under Prof. Siegfried Ochs. The second programme is to be devoted to the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's-day' (by the choir of the Royal Hochschule), a Concerto grosso, an Organ concerto, and some chamber duets, Prof. Joseph Joachim being the conductor. The Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, will on the third day perform 'Belshazzar.' The one remarkable feature of the festival seems to be the participation of the three choirs, each under its own particular conductor, a proceeding which seems likely to lead to comparisons more than usually odious.—Albert Lortzing's operas, though almost unknown abroad, are still extremely popular in Germany, so much so in fact that the total number of performances aggregates more than those of any other composer with the sole exception of Wagner. Little wonder therefore that he, like most distinguished Germans, is to have a monument in the Berlin Thiergarten. Prof. Eberlein will be the sculptor, and his work will show the whole length figure of the composer of 'Czar und Zimmermann.' Bas-reliefs, illustrating scenes from some of the master's works, will be included in the ornamentation of the structure, which will reach a height of twelve feet.—A Musik-Fachausstellung (Music trades' exhibition) was opened here on May 5 by Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia, the honorary president.—Herr Max Lewandowsky gave a concert of his compositions on May 27 in the Beethoven Hall. The programme included a new Symphony in C minor, a Serenade in D for orchestra, and five songs, which did not however display either marked individuality or technical finish.—Several foreign male-voice choirs have lately visited Berlin to obtain a German verdict on their performances. Amongst them were the 'Sängerbund of Moravian teachers,' conducted by Prof. Ferdinand Wach, and the 'Handelsstandens Sangforening' (Merchants' singing Society) from Christiania, under Kapellmeister Iver Holter. The performances were highly creditable, and even remarkable in the case of the Moravian Society; but although they were very favourably received, these singers were scarcely able to show their German confrères and the Berlin public and critics any new and striking development in choral singing.

BIELEFELD.

A new orchestral Suite by James Rothstein was successfully produced here at the last Philharmonic concert, under Herr Erich Ochs.

BOLOGNA.

The Royal Philharmonic Academy has offered a prize of 1,000 lire (£40) for the best string quartet (two violins, viola and violoncello). Composers of all countries may take part in the competition, and manuscripts must be sent in by October 31, 1906.

BONN.

Prof. Joseph Joachim has been made an honorary citizen of this town, where he has done so much to help the yearly Beethoven festivals to the great success which has attended them in recent years. No artist more worthy of the honour could have been found than the veteran master whose name will ever be most intimately connected with the spread of the Beethoven cult.

BREMEN.

Three new works for male chorus and orchestra were produced at the second concert of the Lehrerengesangverein (teachers' choir) under Prof. Panzer. They were 'Neuer Morgen' and 'Die Piraten' (words from Byron's 'Lara' and 'The Corsair' respectively) by Ludwig Hess, and Oscar Fried's 'Erntelied' (the socialist poem by Dehmel). The last-named especially made an overpowering impression by reason of its never absent basso ostinato, above which the piece moves from strength to strength, from a mood of sullen, threatening anger to a terrific climax suggesting a devastating cataclysm. Exceptionally brilliant orchestration helped on the work to its great success.

COLOGNE.

The name of Joachim Raff appears so rarely in German concert programmes in these days that a performance of his overture 'Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott' on April 21 by the local Musikalische Gesellschaft deserves mention.

DRESDEN.

Three movements from a new orchestral Suite entitled 'Carneval' were produced at the last Gewerbehaus concert. The composer is Herr A. Büttner-Tartier.

HAMBURG.

A bronze memorial tablet was affixed on May 7, Johannes Brahms's birthday, to the house in the Speckstrasse where that master was born in the year 1833.

KIEL.

A grand Richard Strauss concert was recently given here by the Musikverein, at which the famous composer conducted an orchestra of 110 players in his 'Heldenleben,' and a new 'Königsmarsch' written for the Emperor's silver wedding and first performed at the gala performance given in connection with that event at the Berlin Royal Opera.

LEIPZIG.

It cannot often have happened in musical history that a composer in his eightieth year has come before the public to submit for their approval a batch of brand new compositions. This is what the veteran Carl Reinecke did on May 13, when at a morning concert and before specially invited guests he produced a Pianoforte trio (Op. 230), two songs—'Italienisches Tanzlied' and 'Frühlingsblumen'—for soprano with violin obbligato and a cantata, 'Der Geiger zu Gmünd,' for soprano and contralto soli, three-part female chorus and declamation, with accompaniment for pianoforte, harp, clarinet, two horns and two violoncellos. The trio especially made a very favourable impression, and the distinguished audience gave the aged master an ovation.

LEMBERG.

An oratorio 'Die Auffindung des heiligen Kreuzes' (The finding of the Holy Cross), by Felix Nowowiecki, was produced here and enthusiastically received. M. Nowowiecki, who twice gained the coveted Berlin Meyerbeer Prize of 7,600 marks, has also written a sacred drama founded on Henryk Sienkiewicz's novel 'Quo Vadis,' which is to be brought to a hearing in the course of next season.

LINZ.

Some years ago the town council of this little city on the beautiful blue Danube, at the suggestion of Herr August Göllerich, voted a sum of money the interest from which for twenty-five years was to be devoted to a biannual Anton Bruckner Festival Concert at popular prices. Bruckner was organist at Linz Cathedral from 1855 to 1867, besides having been born, on September 4, 1824, at Ausfelden, in the Archduchy of Upper Austria, of which Linz is the capital. There is, consequently, some method in the Linz town council's madness: a laudable desire to do honour to the memory of an artist who, after suffering cruel neglect in his lifetime, is now becoming more and more appreciated in Austria and Germany, and even spoken of as the greatest symphonist since Beethoven. The fifth of the concerts was given on April 7 by the Linz Musikverein, the programme consisting of the seventh Symphony, the Te Deum, and a setting, for five-part chorus and three trombones, of Psalm 114. The last-named was performed for the first time, though its composition dates from the period in the fifties when Bruckner was still organist at the Stift (institution) of St. Florian where, as a boy, he was a chorister. The performances of the three works were exceedingly fine, that of the gigantic Symphony especially creating the greatest enthusiasm. The concert attracted many visitors from Vienna and other Austrian towns, and its striking success reflects the greatest credit on the Linz Musikverein no less than on the little cathedral town itself with its 60,000 inhabitants.

MUNICH.

Mynheer Jean Ingenhoven gave a concert with the Kaim Orchestra on April 19, at which only works by young Dutch composers were performed, viz., a symphonic poem 'Morning, noon, and evening' by K. Smulden, a scena for bass with orchestral accompaniment, 'Vondel's journey to Agrippina,' by A. Diepenbrock, an overture to 'Cyrano de Bergerac,' by J. Wagenaar, songs by the conductor, &c.—On April 25 M. Gabriel Pierné's oratorio 'The children's Crusade' was performed here by the Augsburg Oratorien-Verein under Prof. W. Weber, who also gave the first German performance of the interesting work a few weeks ago at Augsburg.—A 'Grosse Messe' (Grand Mass) in D minor by Friedrich Klose was performed on May 7 at the Odeon by the local branch of the General German Music Society. Klose, who is a pupil of Vincenz Lachner and Anton Bruckner, wrote the greater part of the work in 1886, at the age of twenty-four, and under the influence of the great impression which the sudden death of Franz Liszt had made upon him. Since then it has been revised and completed, and is now voted a beautiful and impressive composition.

OLDENBURG.

A new work for soli, chorus and orchestra, entitled 'Gebet' (Prayer), by Hofmusikdirektor Fr. Manns, was produced on April 26 by the Singverein. It is written on old lines, viz., those of the sacred cantata, but not wanting in modern touches—e.g., where the subject suggests dramatic treatment in the description of the havoc wrought by war (baritone solo), after which the prayer 'Lord, give us peace' comes as a beautiful and impressive contrast.

PARIS.

The great event of the musical season has been the Beethoven-Berlioz festival conducted by Herr Felix Weingartner. Four concerts were given at the Châtelet Théâtre and two at the Grand Opéra. The 3rd, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and Choral Symphonies, the Choral fantasia, the G major Pianoforte and the Violin concertos, the 'Egmont,' 'Coriolan' and the three 'Leonore' overtures represented Beethoven; while the Fantastic Symphony, the 'Carnaval Romain' and 'Benvenuto Cellini' overtures and 'Faust' served to illustrate the genius of Berlioz at its best. The Lamoureux orchestra, and the superb chorus of the Amsterdam Oratorium Vereeniging achieved wonders, the latter especially exciting the public and Press to enthusiastic praise. Weingartner was the hero of the week and received a tremendous ovation after the last concert (Choral Symphony) of a great festival, which thus ended 'dans une gloire triomphale.'—Amongst new operas recently produced may be mentioned 'Le Clown,' by M. Isaac de Camondo, a wealthy amateur, who bore the whole cost of three 'special' performances at the Nouveau Théâtre on April 26; 'Le roi aveugle' in two acts, by M. Henry Février, at the Opéra Comique on May 8, and 'Le Paradis de Mahomet,' by the late Robert Planquette (of 'Cloches de Corneville' fame) at the Variétés on May 15; and finally 'La revanche d'Iris,' a one-act curtain-raiser, by Edmont Diet, at the Opéra Comique on May 13. All these works were favourably received and highly spoken of, though no doubt time will eventually find their proper places in musical history, as usual.—A committee has been formed for the purpose of keeping the grave of Stephen Heller, the composer of some unjustly neglected though very charming pianoforte music, in a state of fair preservation, and to adorn it with a monument. He lies buried in the Père-Lachaise cemetery where the earthly remains of so many musicians and poets rest.

PRAGUE.

A programme devoted to sacred works by Bohemian composers of the 18th and 19th centuries was performed at the second sacred concert under K. Dousa, and included a Te Deum by Johann Wenzel Tomášek (d. 1850), a 'Stabat Mater' by Johann Zach (d. 1773), Responsories by Tuma (d. 1774) and Fantasias and Fugues for the organ by Zach and Segen.—A Grieg concert, under the direction of the master himself, was given on April 16. Needless to say he was enthusiastically received.—This year's Master-performances (Meisterspiele) at the German Theatre were opened on May 5 with R. Strauss's 'Salome,' which work, excellently performed and splendidly mounted, was warmly received.—At an orchestral concert conducted by M. Wassili Safonoff a symphonic prologue to Gerhart Hauptmann's play 'Die versunkene Glocke,' composed by M. Vladimir Metzl, a pupil of Safonoff and Nikisch, was produced with great success. It is regarded as the work of a composer of striking talent.

ROME.

Signor Mascagni has been appointed by the Italian minister of Education a member of la commissione governativa per le arti musicale e drammatica, which is the first Italian Governmental authority in matters musical and dramatic. The commission at present consists of Messrs. Puccini, Martucci, Mascagni, Scontrino and the advocate Deparus.

SALZBURG.

This year's Mozart festival—to be held on August 14-20—will be conducted by Felix Mottl, J. F. Hummel and Gustav Mahler. The last-named is engaged, together with an ensemble from the Vienna Court Opera, for two performances of 'Figaro.' 'Don Giovanni' will also be given twice, while at a chamber concert (on August 18) three hitherto unknown manuscript 'Divertimenti' for string quartet will be played by Willy Burmester and other artists. A concert of sacred music is announced for the following day.

STOCKHOLM.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Academy of Music it was decided to elect the following foreign composers as members: Enrico Bossi, Edward Elgar, Carl Nielsen, N. A. Rimsky-Korsakoff and Jean Sibelius, in addition to three master-executants: Hugo Becker, Edouard Risler and Eugène Ysaye.

STUTTGART.

On May 2 the four-act tragic opera 'King and Marshal' ('Drog og Mark') by the Danish composer Peter Arnold Heise (1830-1879) was performed here for the first time in Germany. The work was produced at the Theatre Royal, Copenhagen, in September, 1878, when it achieved an immediate success, and in Denmark even now it is considered a masterpiece of national art which never fails to attract enthusiastic audiences. This fact had doubtless a great deal to do with the acceptance of the opera by the Court theatre; but thanks to the sterling qualities of Heise's music (happily inspired by an excellent libretto dealing with a historical subject of the 13th century) no less than a first-rate performance conducted by Court-Kapellmeister Carl Pohl, the Stuttgart audience greeted the work with considerable warmth. Heise was a student at the Leipzig Conservatorium in 1851 and 1852.

WITTENBERG.

It is reported that amongst the archives of the local town church a setting of the 'Passion according to St. Matthew' dating from the 16th century has been discovered. Perhaps it is as well to treat the news with a certain amount of scepticism until further details are forthcoming.

The Guy's Hospital Musical Society gave a concert in the Court Room, Guy's Hospital, on May 1, the chief item of the programme being Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' which with some part-songs was very creditably performed under the direction of Mr. Henry Taylor. Nurse Margaret Taylor was an efficient accompanist, and Nurse St. John's song was beautifully rendered. We understand that this Society is the only one of its kind in existence at any hospital, in that it is formed exclusively of nurses and students. The membership is now about forty-five nurses and thirty students, and an orchestral section has recently been started. May all success attend this recreative interest of those who minister to the sick poor at Guy's.

A two-act opera 'The Hunchback,' or, to give it its German title 'Die Liebesgeige,' by Mr. Alex. Morvaren, better known as Mr. Alick Morvaren Maclean, conductor at Wyndham's Theatre, was most successfully produced at the Mayence Stadttheater on April 15 (Easter Sunday), in the presence of the composer. The libretto is based on François Coppée's 'Violin-maker of Cremona.' The performance, without being anything like perfect, was sufficiently smooth to impress both public and critics with the value of the work, so that Mr. Morvaren was not only called before the curtain nine times, and presented with laurel wreaths, but had the satisfaction of reading words of genuine appreciation and warm praise, unstintedly given, in the local Press. We hope to return to this interesting event next month.

An audience of over 3,000 persons assembled in Massey Hall, Toronto, on April 23 to hear a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' by the Toronto Festival Chorus under the very able direction of Dr. Torrington. Special interest attached to the performance by the fact of its being Madame Albani's final appearance at Toronto, and she was associated in the solo music with Mlle. Eva Gauthier, Mr. Theodore Van Yox, Mr. David Ross and Mr. Albert Archdeacon, the latter singing the part of Jesus. The choir sang with admirable tone and delicacy of expression, and the orchestra was fully efficient. Congratulations are due to Dr. Torrington for a highly successful performance.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: The Charles Mortimer Prize (composition) to Susan Spain-Dunk (Folkestone); the Louisa Hopkins Prize (pianoforte playing) to Hilda Rekas (West Horsley); the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship (all branches of music) to Francis Hutchens (Leeston, New Zealand); the Thalberg Scholarship (pianoforte playing) to Dorothy A. Chilton Griffin (London); the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship (female vocalists) to Harriett Amelia Franklin (London).

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABERDEEN.—The Choral Union closed its season recently with a highly-intelligent rendering of Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The band and chorus numbered 260 performers and the principal vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. Arthur Collingwood conducted. The choral works performed in Aberdeen this season include 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'Messiah,' Goring Thomas's 'Sun Worshippers' and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm. The Scottish Orchestra, under Dr. Cowen, has also given two very successful concerts, the fine concert hall being packed. Among the principal musical happenings of last season a delightful series of chamber concerts was organized and successfully carried out by Mr. Julian Routh. The Verbruggen Quartette contributed the whole programme at the last of the series.

AMBLESIDE.—The Ambleside Westmorland Competition Choir gave its annual concert at the Assembly Rooms on May 1, when Brahms's Rhapsody for alto solo (Miss Barnett), male-voice choir and orchestra, and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' were performed. The choir, especially in Cliffe's work, was exceptionally good and was ably assisted by the orchestra. Mr. Rauling conducted.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and 'Fairland' orchestral suite, under the conductorship of the composer, on May 15. Among the other items of the programme (conducted by Dr. H. A. Harding) were Mozart's 'Zauberflöte' overture, Bach's Air in C for strings (from the suite in D major) the first movement of Beethoven's fourth Symphony and Luigini's 'Egyptian ballet.' Miss Frederica Richardson was the vocalist.

BOGNOR.—The Musical Society performed Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' on April 25 with much success, the solos being undertaken by Messrs. Clifford Hunnybun and W. Coleman, the other vocalists being Miss Edith Evans and Mr. Mark Gould. The programme also included Stanford's 'Corydon, arise' and Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' given unaccompanied by the choir; and the orchestra was heard in Smetana's overture 'The bartered bride' and Auber's overture 'Zanetta.' Mr. F. J. W. Crowe conducted.

BROMLEY (KENT).—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the Choral Society on April 25. The choir gave evidence of careful training by their conductor, Mr. F. Fertel, and were well supported by an efficient orchestra. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Maude Wilby, Miss Alice Stroud, Mr. Bertram Pearce and Mr. George Uttley.

BRUTON.—The eleventh annual concert of the Choral Society took place on May 10, when Parry's 'Job' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' were performed. The chorus sang exceedingly well and the band, led by Miss Beatrice Heginbotham, played excellently. The solo vocalists were Miss Frederica Daniell, Mr. James Davis, Mr. R. A. Grant, and Mr. A. E. Chubb. Mr. Rowland Hughes conducted.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—The Thurston House Choral Society presented a varied programme in the Town Hall on May 5. It included Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' and the part-songs 'Daybreak' (Fanning) and 'Night' (Gounod). The solo vocalists were Miss Borwell Holbrook, Miss Alice Coppin, Mr. Penderel Price and Mr. Rudd Allen, the two last named taking the solo parts in Sir Hubert Parry's cantata. Mr. William Hockey conducted.

CALNE.—The second concert of the Musical Society this season took place on April 26, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' were performed. Miss Beatrice John, Mr. Ben Calvert and Mr. W. J. Fraying were the solo vocalists. The choir and orchestra of seventy performers contributed to a successful performance under the direction of Mr. W. R. Pullein.

CARDIFF.—The Cardiff Harmonic Society on May 9 gave a performance of David Jenkins's oratorio 'Job' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the north-east wind.' The Society, which consisted of 200 voices, was assisted by a capable orchestra (led by Mr. Arthur Angle) and the following solo vocalists: Miss Dora Davies, Miss Minnie Lewis, Messrs. Gwilym Richards, W. H. Morgan and David Hughes. The performance of Mr. Jenkins's oratorio had aroused much interest, and it met with a very enthusiastic reception, while Mr. Cliffe's Ode was no less favourably received. The conductor, Mr. Roderick Williams, is to be congratulated on a successful performance.

CATERHAM.—The Choral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on May 2. The choir sang with much spirit and good attack, and the orchestra was efficient. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Charles Hunt conducted.

CHICHESTER.—The Musical Society gave a concert on April 30, the works chosen for performance being Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Max Bruch's 'Fair Ellen,' both of which received adequate interpretations under the skilful direction of Dr. F. J. Read. The orchestra played Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings and Grieg's 'Holberg' suite for strings. The soloists were Miss Edith Lakeman, Mr. Aubrey Millward (vocalists), and Mr. Gordon March (violin).—The newly established Orchestral Society gave its first concert on May 10, when the programme included the overtures 'Rosamunde' (Schubert), 'Zanetta' (Auber), Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto (No. 2) in D minor, solo Miss Constance Keyl, who also played Schumann's Andante and Scherzo in F sharp minor (Op. 11.) Miss Constance Bywater was the vocalist and Mr. F. J. W. Crowe conducted.

CHIPPENHAM.—The Amateur Orchestra organized last year by Mr. W. R. Pulein gave concerts in the Town Hall on the afternoon and evening of April 30, when the programmes included Cowen's suite 'In fairyland,' Beethoven's C major Symphony, Wagner's 'Huldigungs-marsch' and Bernhard Carrodus's 'Scotch' Rhapsody, conducted by the composer. There was a full orchestra of fifty-two performers, and Mr. W. R. Pulein conducted.

COLCHESTER.—The Musical Society gave a successful performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on April 26 in the Corn Exchange. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. G. H. Wilby) numbered nearly 200, and the solo vocalists were the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. John Browning. Mr. Charles Osmond was a skilful conductor.

CREWE.—A highly-successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' was given by the Philharmonic Society on April 25. The choir sang with much spirit, and a very capable orchestra (led by Mr. Frank Bathams) gave due effect to the orchestral accompaniments. Miss Euneta Truscott, Mr. Whitworth Mitton and Mr. Joseph Lycett were the solo vocalists, and Mr. William Dunning conducted.

CUCKFIELD.—Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was the chief feature in a concert given by the Musical Society at the Queen's Hall on May 9, and was successfully performed by the choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. F. Knight.

DEAL.—The Deal and Walmer Choral Society gave an excellent performance of the second and third parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha' on May 10. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Herbert Grover and Mr. Charles Knowles. The singing of the choir reflected great credit upon themselves and their conductor, Mr. T. Thomas.

FEATHERSTONE (PONTEFRAC).—The Featherstone and Purston Choral Society gave a concert on May 1 in the Assembly Room, when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was the main feature of interest in a programme which included the part-songs 'Love and summer' and 'Woodmen, shepherds, come away' (John E. West), and Elgar's 'The snow' and 'O happy eyes,' all of which were well rendered by the choir. Miss Amy Darlington, Miss Maud Ferens and Mr. E. Murton were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Hamilton Fearnley conducted.

HORSHAM.—The Musical Society gave its last concert of the present season on May 9, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and 'Gade's 'Spring's message' were performed. Madame Graham Ashton and Mr. Seth Hughes were the solo vocalists, and Miss Lintott led an efficient orchestra, Miss Laura Sapey was solo pianist and accompanist, and Mr. A. P. Whitaker conducted.

ILFRACOMBE.—The Wesleyan Church Choir (about forty voices) gave a concert of sacred music in the church on April 10. The principal works performed were Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm and 'Hear my prayer,'—with Miss Fanny Pickett and Miss Annie Pile as soloists respectively—in addition to several standard anthems and vocal and instrumental solos, all of which were excellently interpreted by various members of the choir. Miss Foster was at the pianoforte, Mr. S. J. Bridgman at the organ, and Mr. Allen Hussell (organist and choirmaster of the church) conducted.

INVERCARGILL (N.Z.).—The Musical Union concluded its season on March 27 in the Zealandia Hall. The part-music by the choir comprised Fanning's 'Daybreak,' Danby's 'Awake, Æolian lyre,' Webbe's 'Breathe soft, ye winds,' Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music,' Schumann's 'Gipsy life,' Goss's 'There is beauty on the mountain,' and the bridal chorus from Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' in all of which the choir sang successfully. The orchestra played several selections, and Mr. Charles Gray ably conducted the concert.

LEAMINGTON.—The New Choral Society concluded its second season with an excellent performance of 'King Olaf' on April 24. The work created much enthusiasm among the singers and audience at this its first performance in Leamington, and the Society is to be congratulated on the success of its enterprise. Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Dan Price were the solo vocalists. Mr. H. M. J. Gibbon conducted.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society gave its third concert this season in the Town Hall on May 3. The principal items in a varied programme were Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing' and Gade's 'Spring's message.' The male voices of the choir were heard in Mendelssohn's 'Vintage song' from 'Loreley,' and the ladies sang Dr. C. H. Lloyd's part-song 'Twelve by the clock.' Madame Edith Montgomery and Mr. Merlin Davies were the solo vocalists, and Mr. A. E. Baker conducted.

MELBOURNE (Australia).—Maunder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was given with much success by the choir of Scot's Church, Collins Street, under the direction of the organist, Mr. W. F. G. Steele, on April 10. The solo parts were ably sung by Mrs. Palmer, Mr. George Baulch, Mr. C. Horsburgh and Mr. Walter Jones. The contralto solo 'He was despised' was impressively rendered by Mrs. W. F. G. Steele, and Guilman's 'Lamentation,' played on the organ by Mr. Steele, preceded the cantata.

MONTREAL.—The Philharmonic Quartette, a part of the Philharmonic Society organized in Montreal by Dr. Charles Harriess, made their debut at Government House, by command of His Excellency Earl Grey, on April 16. The Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Alfred de Sere, J. J. Goulet, Albert Chamberland and J. B. Dubois—all of whom are Canadian musicians and members of the staff of the McGill Conservatorium—have made an auspicious commencement, and their future success will be watched with interest.

NORTHAMPTON.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was performed in the Corn Exchange on May 10 before an audience of over 1,000 persons. The choir sang with spirit and enthusiasm and were well supported by the orchestra. The solo music was interpreted by Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Harry Dearth. The cantata was preceded by Beethoven's 'Leonore' overture (No. 3), which was well played. Mr. C. J. King was an able conductor.

PORTMADOC.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Choral Society at the Town Hall on April 24 under the conductorship of Mr. J. Chas. McLean. The principal vocalists were Miss S. M. Lewis, Madame Sambrook-Jones, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys and Mr. David Hughes.

READING.—The 'Orpheus' Male-voice Society gave their sixtieth concert in the large Town Hall, Reading, on April 25, under the direction of Dr. F. J. Read, the founder and conductor of the Society. An excellent performance was given of 'Longbeard's Saga,' by Dr. Harford Lloyd, who conducted his own work. A new part-song 'The beauty of the Northern dawns,' by Mr. Percy A. Whitehead, was conducted by the composer, and had a very hearty reception. Mr. Boris Hambourg (violinist) and Mr. Robert Radford (bass) contributed solos, and Mr. F. Sewell and Mr. Percy Whitehead were the accompanists.—The Philharmonic Society performed Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' in the Town Hall on May 2. The choir of about 200 sang with spirit and intelligence, and the orchestra was led by Mr. A. Burnett. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss E. Lakeman, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. H. Turnpenney, and Messrs. Mercer and Borough. Dr. F. J. Read conducted.

RETFORD.—The Choral Society's second concert this season took place in the Town Hall on April 25, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The choir sang with spirit and enthusiasm both in the cantata and in Pinsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls,' the market chorus 'Masaniello' and the pilgrims' chorus, 'Tannhäuser.' The solo vocalists were Miss Eva Rich, Miss M. Haslam, Mr. F. Taylor and Mr. T. E. Mackie. Mr. Hamilton White was as usual an able conductor.

ROCHESTER.—The Rochester, Stood and Chatham Choral Society completed its thirty-third year of work by a fine performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride' on May 7. It was evident that the preparation of the work had been a labour of love to all concerned, both the chorus and the orchestra acquitting themselves with the confidence begotten of familiarity. The orchestra, fifty strong, was provided by the band of the Royal Engineers. The principal vocalists were Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Walter Ivey. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted.

ROMSEY (HANTS).—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung in the Abbey on May 2 by the Romsey Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. L. S. C. Moss. The principal vocalists were Miss Virginia Sassard, Miss Marie Guard (a local contralto who undertook successfully the contralto music at a few hours' notice), Mr. Dean Trotter and Mr. S. J. Bishop. The choruses were well sung, and the accompaniments were provided by strings and the organ, at which Mr. J. C. Richards, the Abbey organist, presided.

SCARBOROUGH.—A musical service was held in Queen Street Chapel on May 17, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and a selection from Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' were sung, accompanied by orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Cass) and organ (Mr. G. H. Knight). The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Hirst, Miss Marion Postill, Mr. F. Davison and Mr. David Pecket. Mr. Henry Hill conducted.

SEVENOAKS.—The St. John's Choral Society gave a concert in the Club Hall on May 2, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' was performed by an orchestra and chorus of one hundred performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Frederica Daniell and Mr. Albert Garcia. The programme also included Schubert's fifth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor (solo, Miss Katharine Fletcher). The orchestra was ably led by Mr. A. G. Whitehead, and Mr. W. A. Taylor conducted. Miss Elsie Hall gave a pianoforte recital at the Assembly Rooms of the Royal Crown Hotel on May 17, assisted by Miss Marie Busch. Miss Hall's rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Andante and Rondo Capriccioso,' a Prelude and Study by Chopin, and Brahms's Intermezzo (Op. 117) deserve special mention. Miss Busch's exquisite singing of Dvorák's 'Songs my mother taught me' and Brahms's 'Sandmännchen' was also much appreciated. Miss A. M. Jones was the accompanist.

SPALDING.—The third of Mr. William Woller's Subscription Concerts took place in the Corn Exchange on April 26, the most important items in the programme being Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' and Speer's 'Jackdaw of Rheims.' Miss Birt, Miss Neill Fraser and Mr. Dan Richards were responsible for the solo music in Gade's cantata, and Mr. Woller conducted.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A programme of considerable interest was presented by Mr. Francis J. Foote's Choir in the Great Hall on May 2, and attracted a large audience. It included Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor (played by Herr Hans Wessely), and a Kyrie and Gloria from Mr. Foote's Mass in G minor. The choir sang throughout con amore, and the orchestra (led by Mr. Spencer Dyke) was excellent. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Baxter, Miss Constance Dugard, Mr. Hubert Baker and Mr. Marcus Thompson. Mr. Foote conducted.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—The musical Society gave its second concert on May 17 in St. Saviour's Schools, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' was the chief feature of attraction, the tenor solo being sung by Mr. J. Pearson. The programme included the madrigals 'In going to my lonely bed' (Edwards) and 'Fire, fire my heart' (Morley) by the choir, also Bach's Concerto for pianoforte and strings in D, all of which were well received. Mr. A. H. R. Robinson conducted.

WEYMOUTH.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's departure' was performed by the Choral Society in the Royal Victoria Jubilee Hall on May 10, under the direction of Mr. W. Stone. The choir and orchestra discharged their duties efficiently, and the solo vocalists were Miss Beatrice Dunn, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Thomas Rainger.

Answers to Correspondents.

SOPRANO.—The original air of 'My lodging is on the cold ground' was composed by Matthew Locke and is included in the violin airs at the end of the 'Dancing Master' (1665), but about the year 1670 it was displaced by another melody. The air as now known was printed in 'Vocal Music,' 1775. Thomas Moore appropriated the tune and inserted it in his 'Irish Melodies,' and wrote for it 'Believe me, if all those endearing young charms'; but there is no evidence that the strain is other than of English origin, nor is there the slightest reason to assume that Ireland gave it birth. The words are in 'The Rivals,' an alteration in 1668 of Fletcher's 'Two noble kinsmen.'

T. B.—One need not be old-fashioned in one's views to doubt the absolute bad taste, or total lack of taste, of an organist who 'improves' hymn-tunes to the extent of telling his sopranos to sing the last two lines of Dykes's 'Melita' ('Eternal Father, strong to save') an octave higher than written! and meting out the same maltreatment to the concluding bars of Goss's 'Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven.' Such a malefactor should be given no quarter, except a quarter's notice.

AMATEUR.—(1) The following are arrangements for pianoforte and violin of Tchaikovsky's orchestral works and operas: Elegie from serenade for strings, 2s. 6d. Potpourri 'Casse Noisette' suite, 4s. Walzer from 'Eugene Onegin,' 4s. Walzer from 'Dornroschen,' 2s. 6d. Potpourri 'Pique Dame,' 4s. There are no arrangements of the 'Pathetic' symphony for pianoforte and violin. (2) We cannot trace that Beethoven's and Mozart's waltzes have been arranged for the above instruments.

O. M.—The remains of the following musicians have been re-interred: Bach, Haydn, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert and Dragonetti; and of Englishmen, Dr. Greene, John Davy (in the same churchyard, St. Martin-in-the-Fields) and Sir W. G. Cusins. For a complete list you had better apply to Mr. Algernon Ashton: he could doubtless also furnish you with the names of those musicians who have been buried at sea—in other words, those who sleep their last sleep in ocean's bed.

X. Y. Z.—You seem to have been particularly unfortunate with your pianoforte teachers, first the lady who allowed you 'to go on in rather a slovenly manner,' and then the gentleman who told you that you were 'too eager.' As you have been learning the pianoforte for three years, in spite of your drawbacks you ought in time 'to attain a proficiency equal to playing any ordinary song, or to play hymns at sight.' Seek the help of a good teacher—one who would be of real assistance to you in your sight-reading difficulties.

R. I.—The following are the publishers and prices of the songs you mention: Stanford's 'Five songs of the sea,' Boosey & Co., 2s. 6d.; Rubinstein's 'The dewdrops shine,' 'The Asra,' and 'The wood-witch,' Novello's Album of German Songs, vol. iii., 1s. 6d. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies's book 'The singing of the future' is published by Mr. John Lane, price 7s. 6d.

H. B.—Ellis's 'History of musical pitch' is a privately printed pamphlet and was not published in the usual way, therefore it can only be obtained at a second-hand book-seller's. The basis of the pamphlet was two papers read by the author before the Society of Arts on March 5 and April 2, 1880, and published in the 'Proceedings' of the Society.

OBOE.—(1) The easiest organ sonatas by Merkel and Rheinberger are No. 5, in D minor, of the former, and the Pastoral of the latter composer. (2) The most fully annotated edition of Bach's organ works is that by Bridge and Higgs. (3) Wach's 'L'organiste improvisateur' is a treatise and is only published with French text.

ORPHEUS.—Why Florence? (the reference is to the city of that name, not to one of the fair sex). There is excellent teaching to be had in England, and there are scholarship opportunities whereby so gifted a young lady as your friend appears to be could obtain a musical education, and possibly maintenance, in this country.

J. M. D.—The following church cantatas by J. S. Bach are published in tonic sol-fa notation: 'God's time is the best,' 'Jesu, priceless treasure,' 'Now shall the Grace,' 'O Light everlasting,' 'Sleepers, wake!' and 'A stronghold sure' (choruses only).

F.—For small choral works suitable for a chorus of between 30 and 40 voices, see 'St. Cecilia's Day' (Van Bree), 'The wreck of the Hesperus' (Anderton), 'May-Day' (Macfarren), 'St. John's Eve' (Cowen), 'Come, let us sing' and 'Lauda Sion' (Mendelssohn).

W. E. D.—We are unable to furnish information as to the first-rateness (or otherwise) of the chief professor of the violoncello at the foreign teaching institution you mention. Traditions at such places are not always maintained.

J. B.—Henry Philips, the singer, was buried, not cremated, at Woking cemetery in 1876: we believe the crematorium there was not erected until two years later, in 1878.

AMBITIOUS.—Advertise, ask your teachers, and make known your desire to all the musical people you know. Why not try for an open scholarship at one of the great Schools of Music?

LILY.—Bonavia Hunt's 'Concise history of music,' published by Messrs. Bell & Co., is a useful little book for a beginner in the study of the subject.

D. J.—Tchaikovsky is not 'still alive' and therefore we are afraid that you cannot 'communicate with him personally'; he died in October, 1895.

ELFRIDA.—Carte's complete course of instruction for the Boehm flute (8s. net, and published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.) is the book you need.

C. P. C.—The C clef is a movable clef and can be placed on any line of the stave: its position determines the place of middle C, i.e., the C between the bass and treble clefs.

OMICRON.—You will find the following suitable for teaching singing to boys under fifteen years of age: Novello's School Song Book, Nos. 91, 137 and 138.

P. J. M.—Your volume of Moore's Irish melodies is not, we fear, of any great pecuniary value.

F.R.C.O.—There are no arrangements for the organ of the excerpts from 'Tristan' that you mention.

F. E. E.—Full-scores of the 'Nibelungen Ring' are not let out on hire.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN
OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

---

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

---

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day. Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

MINUET D'AMOUR, for Small Orchestra, also Violin and Pianoforte.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations," brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encores.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

VARIAZIONI ED IMPROVVISATI SU UN TEMA ORIGINALE

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

J. H. FOULDS.

(Op. 4.)

Price Two Shillings net.

"Is interesting from beginning to end, and shows considerable accomplishment, as well as a leaning towards the modern influences in the art. . . . The ideas are good, the theme is developed with great ingenuity, there is plenty of variety as well as technical difficulty in the variations, and the whole composition is one that calls for high praise."—The Times.

"We find these variations extremely interesting. . . . Here is a very original theme upon which is built a series of as really original variations, stone upon stone, so to speak, until at length is completed an admirable, even beautiful, musical structure that should find its way into many a pianist's repertoire."—The Queen.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES
FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

RV

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING 600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898 the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renaut, Esq., for the use of the new paper on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme. E. A. D.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION

IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY
EMILY R. DAYMOND,
D.Mus., Oxon.

THIS book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

MR. HENRY PLEVY

(TENOR).

PLYMOUTH.—“LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL” and Handel’s “SOUND AN ALARM.”—“Accquitted himself with great success in the tenor solos as ‘Sir William’ and ‘The Mountain Spirit.’ The second part of the concert opened with a glorious rendering of Handel’s ‘Sound an Alarm.’ The soloist had ample opportunity of displaying the range and quality of his voice, the higher notes being exceedingly well negotiated. He heartily deserved the encore which was accorded to him.”—Western Morning News, February 16, 1906.

BARNSTAPLE MUSICAL SOCIETY (THE SPRING FESTIVAL).—“HYMN OF PRAISE.”—“Mr. Plevy made a most dramatic incident of the ‘Watchman Scene,’ and with clear intonation and fine quality of voice, sang ‘Sing ye praise’ with fervency of feeling.”—Western Morning News, Apr. 24, 1906.

“He has a voice of excellent quality, the upper register being particularly strong, and he sings with the finish of the true artist. In the ‘Watchman Scene’ Mr. Plevy showed decided dramatic power, the gradually ascending theme being declaimed with thrilling effect.”—North Devon Journal, April 26, 1906.

BIRMINGHAM.—“STABAT MATER” (Rossini) and “PRODIGAL SON.”—“Mr. Plevy was most successful in the reflective solo, ‘How many hired servants,’ with the sequel ‘I will arise,’ and equally good in the duet. This is a fine number. . . . Mr. Plevy sang well in the showy solo ‘Cujus Animam.’”—Daily Post, April 14, 1906.

“The familiar ‘Cujus Animam’ met with the utmost appreciation.”—Daily Mail, April 14, 1906.

BLAIRGOWRIE.—“SAMSON.”—“ . . . His versatility was shown in the pathetic ‘Total Eclipse,’ and the dramatic ‘Why does the God of Israel sleep?’ which brought forth much applause; as also in the duet ‘Go, baffled Coward.’ He was in grand form, and took his runs with marked ease and perfection.”—Blairgowrie Advertiser, March 24, 1906.

“Was in excellent voice, and in the items allotted to him took the runs perfectly and with great ease.”—Dundee Advertiser, March 23, 1906.

GRIMSBY.—“ANCIENT MARINER.”—“For the tenor, two very fine songs are scored. In both of these Mr. Plevy sang splendidly. His voice is of a full timbre, rather than of a light one, and though he sings with very intelligent expression he can command any amount of force when occasion requires.”—Grimsey News.

For terms, address, 88, Yale Court, West Hampstead, N.W.; or usual Agents.

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898 the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renault, Esq., for the use of the new paper on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme.

TEACHING DEPARTMENT.

MICHAELMAS, EASTER and SUMMER TERMS (twelve weeks each) begin respectively in September, January, and April. Students are received for Single Musical Subjects as well as for the Course, and the lessons may be taken during the day or on certain evenings.

The COLLEGE ORCHESTRA, the CHOIR, and the various Ensemble Classes, also the Courses of Lectures with demonstrations which are given each Term on the Art of Teaching as applied to Music, Musical History, &c., are open to those not attending the College for other subjects.

In the JUNIOR SCHOOL Pupils are admitted up to the age of 15.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

There are THIRTY OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS tenable at the College, and they are awarded for the following subjects: Composition, Pianoforte, Singing, Organ, Violin, Violoncello, Harp, Wind Instruments.

LOCAL EXHIBITIONS.

In connection with the LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, FIFTY EXHIBITIONS in PRACTICAL MUSIC, and TWELVE EXHIBITIONS in the THEORY OF MUSIC are annually awarded, and are tenable at Centres for the College Local Examinations, and open to all candidates both in the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS.

These Examinations for TEACHERS' DIPLOMAS of Associate and Licentiate in both PRACTICAL and THEORETICAL MUSICAL SUBJECTS, as also for CERTIFICATES, are held annually in January and July.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

The MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE (Theory) EXAMINATIONS are held in June and December.

The INSTRUMENTAL and VOCAL MUSIC EXAMINATIONS are held throughout the Session at various Centres throughout the United Kingdom, and in the Colonies and India.

The Prospectus of the Teaching Department, the Regulations for Scholarships, the Higher Examination Syllabus, and the Local Examination Syllabus, may be had from the undersigned.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS).

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE (Principal of the Royal Academy of Music) writes:—

It would appear somewhat late in the day to praise Messrs. Broadwood's Instruments, but they seem to become better and better as the famous English firm grows older.

The fine and durable workmanship and magnificent tone (capable of all shades of expression and force) give full satisfaction to amateur and artist alike.

The Usher and his duties are ordained in Cap. III. :

I do also ordain, that there shall be an Usher in each of my Schools, who shall be a godly, learned, and discreet man, one that can make true Latin, both in prose and verse. He shall carry himself reverently towards the School-master, and be ruled by him in his discipline, and for the matter and manner of teaching whom and when. He shall not disgrace the School-master or animate the scholars in undutifulness towards him, or seek to withdraw their or their parents' affections from him, but shall be diligent in his school. . . .

I further ordain, that he shall ever be during the time he is Usher, one of the number of my Hospital, there, where he is Usher, and be called Sub-warden or Confrater, and there at least twice in the week he shall read prayers with the poor people according as he shall be directed by the Governors, or the major part of them, and that he shall have for his Pains per Annum three Pounds.

Passing over Cap. IV.—Of the poor people—a quotation may be made from Cap. V. Of the Scholars :

Further, I do ordain and constitute that there shall be in each of my said Schools from time to time some Scholars that are well fitted for the Universities, of civil conversation (if God so bless my Schools), chosen to receive Exhibition of forty shillings per annum, till the number of seven at least be filled up in each place; &c.

The remainder of the Statutes need not be quoted, as they refer to details of finance, &c.

Consideration may now be given to the School buildings. If the visitor be of an antiquarian turn of mind he will take a special interest in the original schoolroom, which stands, unrestored, at the east end of the churchyard (see the illustration on p. 452). On the outer wall of this ancient (1584) schoolroom—now used as the art school—are three inscriptions, written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin :

HEBREW : Proverbs xxii. 6 ; 'Train up a child in the way he should go,' &c.

GREEK : St. Mark x. 14 ; 'Suffer the little children to come unto Me,' &c.

LATIN : Ecclesiastes xii. 1 ; 'Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.'

Although there is no mention of Hebrew in the Statutes, it was not infrequently taught to children in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and there are proofs that Archdeacon Johnson took an interest in the study of the language. While in the neighbourhood of the parish church, reference may be made to the fact that Jeremy Taylor was rector from 1638 to 1643 : the richly carved oak pulpit from which the eminent divine preached is still retained, though apparently at the restoration of the church (1860-61) two of the ancient panels found their way into a curious corner of the house taken by Mr. Paul David, the music-master, who on discovering the panels had them re-inserted in the pulpit, to replace the plain deal boards which some vandal had put in by way of exchange !

Of lesser antiquity are the old School House, once the residence of the head-master, and the now disused School studies (date about 1800), visible through a screen of ivy in the photograph on page 455. The modern buildings which form the architectural glories of Uppingham belong to the golden period of the School, that inaugurated by its great head-master, Edward Thring (1821-87). A born educationist, strenuous in carrying out his high ideals, Thring changed Uppingham from a more or less fluctuating grammar-school into a great public school. When in 1853 he became head-master there were only twenty-five boarders and five or six day boys : at his death (in 1887) the school roll numbered upwards of 300. By his enlightened policy he revolutionized the educational methods that had hitherto prevailed in English public schools. For instance, in 1859, the first gymnasium ever erected in a public school came into existence at Uppingham ; in 1871 garden plots were assigned to boys interested in horticulture ; a carpenter's shop and a forge were erected and teachers of turning, carpentry and metal work were appointed and still form part of the teaching staff. With a warm-hearted interest in the conditions of life in the East-end of London, Thring, in 1869, was the first head-master to start a School Mission in the Metropolis. His dauntless courage, his extraordinary energy and the way he would simply fight through any barriers of difficulty were instanced in a very remarkable manner at a most critical period when, owing to an outbreak of fever, he removed the entire school for the whole year (1876-77) from Uppingham to Borth, on the Cardiganshire coast, a bold experiment, fully justified by results !

The Uppingham buildings specially associated with Thring are the Schoolroom (1863) and the Chapel (1865), both erected from designs by the late G. E. Street, R.A. The Schoolroom, which cost £7,000, is a spacious room decorated with elaborate paintings, chiefly illustrative of the great names in ancient and modern literature. The School Chapel—opened April 27, 1865—is built of local stone, and has cost altogether £10,000. In 1891 its beautiful interior was enriched by a Galilee Memorial Chapel, added at the west-end and containing a statue of Thring, a very fine piece of work by Mr. T. Brock, R.A.

The School Library is housed in part of the old School House which, after being the Bede-house of the Foundation till about 1800, was the head-master's residence till 1890, when the present by Mr. G. Frampton, R.A. Apart from these School buildings three new boarding-houses have been built and five have been enlarged.

Yet another and the latest addition to the School buildings has to be mentioned, and that is of special interest in that it is associated with music and the much esteemed music-master of the School. The need of a concert-room in which performers and audience could properly breathe had long been felt. To propose the erection of a building that should be devoted entirely to musical performances would have resulted in a non possumus, therefore the suggestion was made and has been admirably carried out that the new building should serve a double purpose—a gymnasium and a concert-hall seating 900 people. On the occasion of a concert the ropes suspended

School House was opened. This and the adjacent class-rooms form two sides of the School Yard and were designed by Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A.

The progressive spirit and enlightened educational policy of Edward Thring animate the rule of his successor, the Rev. Dr. Edward Carus Selwyn. During his head-mastership there have been added new class rooms, in celebration of the Tercentenary of the foundation, and the Victoria building (1897), with entrance gate under the tower, containing a museum, chemical laboratory, and large lecture-room, and carpentry and engineering workshops: over the gateway is a fine statue of the founder from the lofty roof make way for the chords which proceed from the orchestra, and the physical quite naturally gives place to the artistic side of Uppingham School life. This beautiful room, with its canary-wood panelling, has cost £7,500, the expense being met by subscriptions from Old Uppinghamians and other friends of the School. As a concert-room it honours the work of the present music-master (of whom more anon) and is named after him; as a gymnasium it commemorates the Old Uppinghamians who fell in the South African war. A photograph taken specially for this article of this valuable addition to the educational equipment of Uppingham, is given on p. 453. Above the outer door of the room is the legend Caesorum Comitum Memores, and in large letters running round the apsis at the back of the orchestra are the classic words—which fronted the conductor's chair at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig—Res severa est verum gaudium.

The new concert-room naturally leads to the consideration of music at Uppingham School, and its place in the curriculum; and in this connection we must quote from Mr. George R. Parkin's 'Life and letters of Edward Thring' (Macmillan). The author says:

At a very early stage in his work Thring formed the opinion that music might be used as a refining and elevating influence in school-training. So far as the traditions of the public schools were concerned, he was power and believe in seeds. Never before in England has such a thing happened as a great school having its own music in this way and rising with it. The zeal of the boys was wonderful. This stirs the heart and refreshes it. It is a burst of spring in the midst of the east winds of masters and the pelting rain of Commissions.

Again, two years later (in 1875):

The choir practised in chapel to-night for the first time, a glorious reality. How the grand music rolled through the space and lingered in the roof! Perchance a thousand years hence that roof or those walls may fill with prayer and praise, and the music we first heard to-day be rolling on. Amen.

And all this, and more, in spite of the fact that Thring was most unmusical! At the same time, he was wise enough to see the potentialities of music as an educational factor in a boy's life. As Mr. Paul David has well said:

That Thring, himself quite unmusical, should have been the first to introduce music into such schools is certainly very remarkable. Like every great innovator, he was in this point, as in many others, in advance of his time.

To quote further from Mr. David:

The power of vocal music to enhance and emphasise the meaning of words appeared to Thring of great value. It was with a view to their being set to music and sung and thus brought forcibly home to a large number of performers and listeners, that he wrote his school songs. These songs, so full of idealism and enthusiasm—how he delighted in hearing them rendered by a hundred youthful voices! There, at least, he thought some of the sacred fire that burned in his heart had caught the hearts of the boys.

It is pleasant to learn that the present headmaster maintains the musical traditions of the School over which he has so ably presided nearly a full score of years. Dr. Selwyn has kindly contributed the following note on music as an educational asset specially for this article. He says:

'I am strongly convinced of the value of music as a refining influence in education, without going so far as to say that it possesses a moral power. It operates for good in the zone of manners. And its influence is not confined to the performer, but extends to those who appreciate without performing or learning themselves. Nor do I think that consciousness of proficiency in music contributes to conceit or vanity on the performer's part. Music among boys is not an enemy of modesty.

'The attendance at the School musical performance is compulsory on the boys, although this takes the place of a lecture once in every three weeks in the winter terms; and yet the effect is anything but to create a dislike for music. The behaviour is good, and the result is somehow to promote appreciation, and as I am fain to believe to humanise the hearers, however unmusical they are. Mr. David, of course, is a sort of magician.'

The musical activities of Uppingham School are controlled and energized by an efficient staff of teachers, with Mr. Paul David at their head, his venturing out into an entirely unknown sea when he made the innovation of introducing music into his regular system of education. But he believed that, in addition to a generally refining influence, it could also be made a means of interesting and stimulating boys not specially open to intellectual ambitions. So one of his earliest school ventures was the engagement of a music master. It was characteristic that from the very first he determined that the music given to the boys should be of the best.

One or two extracts from Thring's diary may be given as showing his keen interest in music, unmusical though he was. Thus, after a concert in 1873:

The whole concert Uppingham. What an epoch! The boys encored the school song again and again, and all rose and stood whilst it was being sung. It was a grand time for those who can see life assistants being Mr. S. Fricker (a pupil of Joachim's at the Hochschule, Berlin); Mr. O. Bedall (Munich Conservatorium); Mr. W. Bethe (violin-cello); Mr. W. Greator, F.R.C.O. (organist); and Mrs. Fricker (née David). Simple music, sung by a choir of eighty voices with Mr. Greator at the organ, characterizes the chapel services. In his organ voluntaries Mr. Greator supports the Uppingham policy by giving his hearers nothing but the best music written for his instrument. The School orchestra provides ample scope for the really musical of the violin pupils. Here the conductor, Mr. David, inspires the boys with a full appreciation of the old masters—especially Haydn and Mozart—and instils into his young fiddlers a thorough grip of the ideas of musical performance, although the interpretation is naturally only a boy's best. Proof of Mr. David's method and magnetism was furnished on the occasion of our visit by the vigorous manner in which the band music by Paul David—may serve as a specimen verse :

Ho, boys, ho !
Gather round, together stand,
Raise a watchword in the land ;
Stand my merry craftsmen bold,
Brothers of the crown of gold
Wrought in stirring days of old,
England's crown, the crown of gold.
Gold of hearts that know no lie,
Gold of work that does not die.
Ho, my merry craftsmen bold,
Work again the crown of gold,
Work it new, boys, young and old,
Gather, gather, near and far,
Uppingham, hurrah, hurrah !

The first six notes of this song :

rehearsed Mozart's 'Don Juan' overture. In addition to the boys, the orchestra includes three of the assistant music-masters, and a quintet of enthusiastic amateurs, viz., three assistant-masters and two ladies, wives of masters.

A school concert is given at the end of every term and one on speech day. On these occasions a selection from or a complete oratorio is given, as, for example, an excellent performance of 'Samson' in April last. For these concerts separate choir and orchestral rehearsals are held on Saturday evenings; on Sunday evenings there are combined rehearsals of band and chorus. At the concerts the school orchestra is, of course, supplemented by outside help, and the performance usually concludes with a school-song, of which the following—words by Edward Thring and life of the school is a series of chamber music concerts (about seven) given annually during the winter terms. Mr. David and three of his assistants form a string quartet; trios, violin and pianoforte duets, &c., are also played, and occasionally a song gives variety to the programme. Attendance of the whole school is compulsory at these Uppingham 'Pops,' and the veteran music-master will not allow any lowering of the standard of music chosen for performance. Mr. David tells us how much such works as the Kreutzer sonata and Schumann's Pianoforte quintet are enjoyed, and indeed often asked for.

In regard to individual teaching, there are often upwards of 100 boys—one fourth of the School—learning instrumental music, pianoforte, violin or violoncello, all of whom are examined at the end of every term by Mr. David, who himself teaches the most capable of the violinists. Ample time is allowed to pupils for lessons and practice. Two lessons each of forty-five minutes' duration, are given per week. This individual attention given by the master to the pupil is of the greatest possible advantage and has its reward in the good musical work done at Uppingham.

The Lower School, of which the Rev. Tancred Earle Raven is the head-master, though not constitutionally connected with the Upper School, was founded in 1875. Here full use is also made of the opportunities afforded by the presence of Mr. David and his coadjutors. There are regular singing classes, for which the music-master makes himself responsible, and about twenty boys sing in the School choir. Instrumental pupils are arranged for as in the Upper School.

Mr. Peter Julius Paul David, music-master at Uppingham School, was born at Leipzig on August 4, 1840 (this date corrects those inaccurately given in various dictionaries of music). The son of the distinguished violinist, Ferdinand David—of whom a biographical sketch is given on page 457—he was brought up in an atmosphere of music. His only recollection of Mendelssohn, however, is a box on the ear he received from his father's friend as a punishment for some mischief in which he, Master Paul, had participated with Mendelssohn's own children. Although only a child of seven years the death of Mendelssohn made a deep impression upon him, and he well remembers how Leipzig was placarded with posters recording the town's musical loss as if its chief musician had been the Burgomaster. Liszt and Schumann he knew well. At a party given by David's father, Hauptmann, then just appointed a professor of the Conservatoire, and Schumann were guests. 'Herr Hauptmann, how do you like Schumann?' 'A charming fellow: he didn't speak a word!'

Paul David was not intended for a musical career. For eighteen months he studied theology at Erlangen, Bavaria, with the idea of becoming a clergyman, but music asserted itself and rehearsals of quartets displaced the preparation of sermons. He entered the Conservatorium of Leipzig, where he studied under his father, Hauptmann, and Plaidy. Among his fellow students were Arthur Sullivan, Franklin Taylor, and Walter Bache. 'Sullivan was a lazy fellow,' recalls Mr. David, 'he did not seem to do anything during the two years of his studentship; but when the time came for him to leave he suddenly woke up and surprised us all by composing his charming music to "The Tempest."' Here is the programme of its first performance, at which Walter Bache played the first movement of Sterndale Bennett's F minor pianoforte concerto. We quote from this interesting programme which Mr. David hands to us. It is headed:

Einladung und Programm zur HAUPT-PRÜFUNG im
Conservatorium der Musik zu Leipzig. Sonnabend den
6 April, 1861, im Saale des Gewandhauses.

The fifth item in the programme reads thus :

Musik zu Shakspear's 'Sturm,' componirt von Herrn Arthur S. Sullivan aus London (unter Leitung des Componisten) Hieraus :

- a. Einleitung.
- b. Lied des Ariel, gesungen von Fräul. Minna Giesinger aus Leipzig.
- c. Entreact.
- d. Grotesker Tanz.
- e. Entreact und Epilog.
- f. Tanz der Nymphen und Schnitter.

Another item may be given :

Concert in Form einer Gesangsscene für die Violine von L. Spohr, gespielt von Herrn Carl Rose aus Hamburg.

This youthful violinist afterwards achieved fame in another sphere of musical work, as the Carl Rosa of English Opera.

After his studentship at Leipzig, Mr. David became a member of the orchestra at Carlsruhe, a post he held for two and a half years. At this time he saw much of Brahms, and having a naturally good voice he used to sing the composer's songs to him from the autograph copies ; he also played the A major quartet of Brahms from manuscript. 'How were you led to come to Uppingham ?' we ask. 'Well, the post as music-master was vacant, and Mrs. Thring mentioned the matter to Sterndale Bennett, whom she knew. Bennett paid a visit to my father at Leipzig and stated Thring's requirement. "Perhaps my boy might suit," said my father to his English guest, with the result that I came to Uppingham in March, 1865, and here I have been ever since.' Among the Mendelssohn treasures that Mr. David possesses are the autograph of a very juvenile Symphony in C, a tall folio full-score presented to him by the composer's widow, and the manuscript of the pianoforte accompaniment to Bach's Prelude in E major (violin) thus inscribed :

An F. David zur und aus der Erinnerung niedergeschrieben, F. M. B. Leipzig d. 11te Nov., 1846.

To return to Uppingham. Mr. David speaks in terms of warm appreciation of the goodwill and support of his assistants, 'without whose valuable co-operation,' he says, 'I could never have done what I have done. And then the boys are extremely keen on music.' In the course of a paper read at a recent meeting of the Union of Directors of Music in Public Schools, Mr. David said :

That at most schools the bulk of our work has to be done out of school hours is, of course, a serious drawback, which also affects the lessons of the instrumental pupils. I confess I sometimes marvel at the punctual appearance of our pupils at Uppingham in the middle of a fine afternoon during the cricket season. That in spite of such unfavourable arrangements the number of music-pupils at most public schools has been largely on the increase of late years, is a striking proof of the value that parents now attach to the study of music.

Any boy who wishes to attend the Sunday evening practices (orchestra and chorus) is at liberty to do so. In this connection Mr. David supplies the following interesting information :

A great many boys avail themselves of this permission, and with some of them attendance becomes quite a habit. I remember a few years ago, when we were preparing Beethoven's C minor Symphony, our audience on Sunday evenings grew larger from week to week ; sometimes we had quite a hundred boys listening to the rehearsal. The result was that you began to hear the main subjects of the Symphony whistled on the cricket-field, and in the quads of the schoolhouses, and that by the time of the actual performance our young audience had become thoroughly interested, and to some extent even capable of intelligent appreciation of the music. Now, I think, for a schoolboy to carry away with him, when he leaves, a memory of the C minor Symphony, as an ideal of music, is no mean advantage.

THE SCHOOL CHAPEL.

(Photograph by Mr. W. J. Stocks, Uppingham.)

No less interesting is Mr. David's declaration of policy in regard to public school music :

Now and then we meet, of course, with the objection of the 'superior person' that all this is wasted on the schoolboy. I beg to differ. I think our motto ought to be :—'For the young, the best is just good enough.' At our last Christmas concert we had among other things, the 'Prisoners' Chorus' from 'Fidelio,' which was enthusiastically encored. It is true I had repeatedly pointed out to my singers the exquisite beauty of the music, and I had noticed that with every practice they got more interested and warmed up. No doubt they in their turn talked of it to their friends, and in this way the boys themselves had prepared the ground. Yet all their talk and my own could never have effected such an outburst of enthusiastic applause as we had at the concert, if there had not been true appreciation of the beauty of the music in the audience.

Mr. David holds sensible views upon the musical training of the boys committed to his charge. He does not begin at the wrong end. To further quote from the paper already referred to :

In trying to rouse in boys a genuine feeling for music and to give them a start in the appreciation of it, we must, in my opinion, begin by offering to them works that are simple and transparent in form and harmonies, easy to grasp and not too difficult to execute. In instrumental music we must encourage the study of the earlier masters, especially of Haydn and Mozart. The art of Beethoven rests not only on the forms but also on the spirit of his great precursors, and again it is Beethoven alone who gives us the cue to the understanding of everything that has come after him to this very day.

These words of wisdom, uttered by a man who is a true artist and an educationist of long experience, cannot be too widely promulgated or too strongly endorsed.

In conclusion, it was a proud day in Mr. David's life when on May 23, 1905, the David Concert Room was opened by Dr. Joachim. At the concert which followed the great violinist played Beethoven's Violin concerto, the programme including a selection from 'Elijah' (Part I.), the 'Idomeneo' overture, two madrigals,—'Since first I saw your face' (Ford) and 'The silver swan' (Gibbons)—and 'Work and War,' a set of four choral songs by Paul David. On that occasion an address was presented to Mr. David couched in these terms :

Paul David, at the opening of this Concert Room as the visible centre of musical life in Uppingham, we rejoice in the thought that its name will recall him by whose genius and patient zeal the spirit of music was constrained to make in this School a permanent and familiar home.

Forty years have passed since you, Mr. David, turned aside from a sure prospect of distinction in the outer musical world, and entered upon your chosen duties at Uppingham. The great Head master who brought you here foresaw, perhaps more clearly than yourself, the part you were destined to fill in the development of the School.

It is not merely as a true musician that we have known you. To those who know you best you have been a master of many subjects, a just and discerning critic, and above all a friend, ever ready to encourage in us that broad and healthy view which marks your own outlook upon the affairs of life.

Accept this expression of our gratitude for the ungrudging labour and care you have given to your life-work, and for the love you have borne the School and so many generations of her sons. We know that you would count as your highest reward the answering love of all those pupils and friends in whose name we now address you.

Be assured that in fullest measure this reward is yours.

In the course of his reply Mr. David said :

It was Mr. Thring who started Music at Uppingham, like so many other good things. And I personally feel that I owe to him and his influence whatever I have been able to do. It was his great example, his ever ready sympathy, and the encouragement he gave me that enabled me to plod on in what in early days often appeared to me an almost hopeless task.—To you, Dr. Selwyn, I also owe a large debt of gratitude for the enthusiastic support you have now for a good many years given to the cause of Music, and for your unvarying kindness and consideration to myself.—I wish also to take this opportunity of thanking you, my friends and colleagues, the Masters of the School, for all the kindness and support I have ever received at your hands. If there is one thing I am proud of, it is the fact that for a period of 40 years I do not remember a single instance of discord between us. Words do entirely fail me when I try to express to you my thanks.

And now, last, but not least, my old pupils, how can I thank you adequately for such a proof of friendship and, I may say, affection, as you are giving me here to-day. The feeling that in you there is for me a net of friends spread over the whole of this country, nay, beyond it, will not leave me to the end of my days. Once more to all of you many, many thanks.

For kind help in the preparation of this article the thanks of the writer are tendered to the Rev. Dr. Selwyn, head-master; Mr. Paul David, music-master; and to Mr. H. H. Champion, one of the assistant-masters; also to the various photographers named under their respective productions.

'How great and how individual the beauty of his songs! The force and grace of expression, the sweetness of sound, the exquisiteness of their representation touch the innermost chords of the human heart, and by merely touching them make men stronger and better. There is no lyric bard who has to such an extent won at once the admiration of the critic and the love of the public.'—Sir Hubert Parry in presenting Edvard Grieg for the degree of Doctor of Music at Oxford, May 29, 1906.

FERDINAND DAVID

(1810—1873).

No musical instrument has attracted more attention in recent years than the violin. This is largely due to the ever increasing number of wonderful performers thereupon, and in a lesser degree to the fabulous sums paid, or said to be paid, for old instruments. Pyrotechnic technique, though not unknown in the days of Paganini, dazzles by its sparkling virtuosity. The appearance of the prodigy violinist, not by any means a modern product, is a common occurrence, and almost ceases to excite wonder. And who shall attempt to estimate the number of lady violinists who charm by their interpretative gifts upon an instrument that a generation ago was not considered 'suitable for ladies'? Times have changed: not the violin. The tone-production—not always for the better—and mechanism of other instruments have been changed, but a good violin has to depend upon the player for full satisfaction as a purveyor of sweet sounds. This changelessness of the violin has therefore not nullified the schools of violin-playing which, reaching back to the 17th century, furnish an interesting contribution to the history of music, whether regarded from creative or interpretative points of view. One of these Schools, the German (or Mannheim), contains such distinguished names as Leopold, Mozart, and Spohr, to which may be added the subject of this biographical sketch.

Ferdinand David was born at Hamburg on June 19, 1810, in the same house as that in which his great friend, Felix Mendelssohn, first saw the light eleven months earlier. This interesting birth-house is in the thoroughfare now called the Grosse Michaelstrasse, and stands at the corner of the Brunnenstrasse: it can easily be identified by a tablet which has been placed over the front door at the instigation of Mr. and Madame Otto Goldschmidt to commemorate the birth of Mendelssohn within those walls. Louise, a younger sister of Ferdinand, was another gifted member of the David family. In her tenth year she appeared in public at Hamburg as a pianist. After her marriage she settled in London, and, as Madame Dulcken, became 'an executive pianist of the first order' and achieved extraordinary success as a teacher, with Queen Victoria at the head of her pupils. The father of these clever children was a prosperous and cultured merchant who had doubts as to the vocation which his son Ferdinand should follow. The boy showed hardly less ability in painting than in music, but music won the cause, and Master Ferdinand very early made his mark.

At the age of twelve he became a pupil of Spohr at Cassel, where for two years he imbibed the best traditions of the German school of violin playing. At the same time and place he studied the theory of music under Hauptmann, afterwards to become one of his colleagues at the Conservatorium, Leipzig. As a boy in his early teens Ferdinand David gave proof of remarkable energy and earnestness as well as a self-dependence beyond his years. After his return to Hamburg the fifteen-year-old fiddler made a concert tour with his sister, Louise, the pianist, in the course of which they visited Copenhagen, Berlin, Dresden and Leipzig. Little did the boy think when he made his first appearance—on December 28, 1825—at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, that he would play such an important part in the history of that famous centre of musical life. At the concert in question his sister played Moscheles's G minor Pianoforte concerto, and the boy-violinist's contributions to the programme were Spohr's 'Gesangsscene' concerto and the same composer's 'Potpourri on Irish airs.' Although the parents of Felix Mendelssohn and Ferdinand David had known each other in Hamburg, it was not till Ferdinand performed in Berlin (in 1825) that the two boys became acquainted with each other—an acquaintance which ripened into a life-long friendship. This Berlin meeting evidently predisposed the young violinist to settle in the Prussian capital. In reply to a communication from David, Mendelssohn, then seventeen yet with all the confidence of a man of affairs and experience, writes a long letter—Berlin, August 1826—in which he favours a settlement in Berlin. He concludes this letter with the conviction that 'it is of the utmost importance to your future career that you should soon come to Berlin, which is certainly one of the first musical places of importance. Would to God that I might soon have the pleasure of seeing you settled here, for I am convinced that nothing could be better for you than life and work in Berlin.' Mendelssohn's advice was acted upon; but with wise precaution David had secured a post as member of the band at the Königsstadt Theater, Berlin, in which he played for two years, 1827-28. Among his fellow bandsmen at that time were the brothers Rietz (or Ritz)—Eduard the violinist, and Julius the violoncellist.

In the spring of 1829 he accepted a private engagement as leader of a string quartet at Dorpat, in Livonia, at the house of a noble and influential amateur whose daughter he subsequently married. His duties were no less light than pleasant, and the holidays enabled him to make successful concert tours in Russia—St. Petersburg, Moscow, Riga, and other cities. The period of the delightful existence at Dorpat came to an end in 1835. In that year Mendelssohn was appointed conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts, Leipzig. To whom should he look for a leader of the famous orchestra but to David? The two friends again met as colleagues in a most congenial occupation, David not only proving himself 'a first-rate coadjutor' to Mendelssohn, but one who took much of the mechanical work of the orchestra off the conductor's shoulders. David held the important post of Concertmeister at the Gewandhaus for thirty-seven years.

In the year 1839 Ferdinand David made his first appearance in England. This took place at the Philharmonic Society's concert of March 18, 1839, when he played his own Violin concerto.

The Musical World, in a notice of the concert, said :

Herr David, whose visit to this country we some time ago anticipated, deserves honourable mention. He is a young man, apparently about twenty-eight years of age, a brother of Madame Dulcken's, and a pupil of Spohr's. His tone is most pure, his cantabile expressive, his intonation perfect, and his bowing such as all English players should endeavour to imitate. His composition—well adapted to exhibit the powers of the violin—fully justifies us in pronouncing it the work of a scholar and a musician of genius. The audience exhibited more than its wonted intelligence in its applause, and we trust that Herr David has no reason to complain of our not being a musical nation, or not disposed to award praise to great and highly cultivated talent.

His appearance at the Philharmonic proved so successful that he was engaged for the concert on April 22, when he introduced his own 'Variations and Russian air,' and led Spohr's Octet. He also played a solo at the Oxford Musical Festival, and took part in many concerts given in London, Manchester and Birmingham.

The success which attended David's visit to England naturally gratified Mendelssohn, but not without some alarm lest his right-hand man should be induced to settle in London. The following letters from Mendelssohn at Leipzig to David, staying at 4, Cumberland Street, Bryanston Square, speak for themselves :

MENDELSSOHN TO DAVID.

Leipzig, April 23, 1839.*

I must thank you in a few lines for the great pleasure you have given me by your dear letter. Very rarely a success of my own has been so welcome to me as yours at your first appearance in London. I awaited it with much anxiety, although I might and ought to have known that it would come as it has come. You can hardly believe how much the confirmation and many expressions of hearty recognition I have received have delighted me. From all sides I hear the same good things, and am right glad that for once a man meets with success who deserves it, and who does not hunt after it nor court people's favour to gain it.

Hochheim, near Coblenz, July 24, 1839.

Since your great success in England, I hear from all sides that you would leave us—I do not mean only us at Leipzig, but us in Germany—and I finished by believing it myself, especially when I heard of the death of Mori. There is not a day I did not turn the question over in my mind and look at it from all sides, and the outcome was always—like you tell me yourself in your letter—in favour of Germany, provided they see their way to offer you a good, honourable position.

You cannot think how often this summer I have been reminded of you and your ways in things musical. The manner in which they do the things in these parts is so very inferior to the ordinary standard of our Leipzig musicians; and these again are nothing unless you are there to keep them together and show them the right way.

That Mendelssohn's fears were groundless we shall presently see. Meanwhile an interesting criticism of the Philharmonic orchestra of that time may here find a place. David thus writes to Mendelssohn from London on April 13, 1839 :

I have now had several opportunities of hearing the Philharmonic orchestra. If, instead of half-a-dozen conductors, they had a fellow like you at their head, one whom they must respect, and were well drilled for a couple of years, no orchestra in the world could surpass them. As it is, the effect is like that of a magnificent organ under the hands of a performer without taste or spirit. The quality of tone is fine; but there is no light and shade, and in difficult passages the execution is slovenly—the sforzandos are like elephant-steps, and the players know no true fortissimo or pianissimo. The double-basses sound beautifully; but owing to the absence of a fourth string a great deal of the music is spoiled. As they are without the low G, the beginning of the Scherzo in the C minor Symphony is played an octave higher, thus ruining the effect. After all they have extraordinary material, and we at Leipzig might be quite satisfied with one half of what they have.

* This letter is one of seventy-two written by Mendelssohn to his friend Ferdinand David, all of which are now in the possession of Mr. Paul David.

The same letter contains a pleasant reference to Sterndale Bennett:

I see a good deal of Bennett. Travelling with him I got to know the full charm of his personality. He is a man from whom I should wish never to be parted, and I cannot understand that all the women don't want to marry him! His compositions do not seem to be much known here. They still see the Academy Student in him. God knows whether the modesty of his nature will permit him to make his way; there are few Englishmen who would not think you mad, if you told them that he is a better musician than Mori, Lindley, and all their other demi-gods!

Two years later David again visited London, when he played at various concerts. In regard to a performance of the Choral Symphony by the Philharmonic Society, he wrote to Mendelssohn as follows:

Yesterday I heard the Choral Symphony conducted by M——, and will you believe it, he made old Dragonetti play the great Recitative passage in the Finale as a solo on his double-bass; that the organ was introduced at 'Stürzet nieder, Millionen,' and that the vocal parts were altered and rearranged in various parts! If M—— does that sort of thing, what can one expect of other people?

I have heard 'Don Giovanni' at Covent Garden. Will you believe that in the first Finale they reinforced the orchestra by Turkish music (side-drum, cymbals, &c.)! and that in the place of the Minuet, a Ballet of one and a quarter hour's duration, with music by Auber and Strauss, was introduced!

For the purposes of this biographical sketch Mr. Paul David has lent us the programme of a concert given by his aunt, Madame Dulcken, on May 31, 1841, at the great Concert Room, Her Majesty's Theatre. At this monster music-making, in which Ferdinand David, the concert-giver's brother, took part, Madame Dulcken and Liszt performed for the first time Liszt's 'Hexameron' for two pianofortes. The gem of the concert appears to have been the first item of Part II. which reads thus in the programme:

PREGHIERA, 'Dal tuo stellato soglio' ('Il Mosè in Egitto')—Rossini. Mesdames G. Grisi, Persiani, Viardot Garcia, Dorus Gras, and Schroeder Devrient; Mlles. Loewe and Meerti.

Sig. Rubini, Mario, Tamburini, Lablache, F. Lablache, and Mr. J. Parry.

Pianoforte—Madame Dulcken, Messrs. Liszt and Benedict.

Harp—Mr. Godefrid.

Violin—Mr. David.

French Horn—Signor Puzzi.

Here is a veritable galaxy of talent—vocal and instrumental. In handing us this programme Mr. Paul David says: 'My father told me that the Preghiera from Rossini's "Moses" was sung in unison by all the vocalists; and that there were no special parts arranged for the instrumentalists—they just put in anything they liked!

Mendelssohn's Violin concerto owes its origin to the subject of this biographical sketch. On July 30, 1838, Mendelssohn wrote to David: 'I should like to write a violin concerto for you next winter. One in E minor runs in my head, the beginning of which gives me no peace.' Later on he refers to it as 'swimming about my head in a shapeless condition,' though 'a genial day or two would bring it into shape.' That David pressed his friend in the matter the following extract from one of the composer's letters—'Hochheim, July 24, 1839'—will show:

Now that is very nice of you to press me for a Violin concerto! I have the greatest desire to write one for you, and if I have a few favourable days here I shall bring you something of the sort. But it is not an easy task. You want it to be brilliant, and how is such an one as I to manage that? The whole first solo is to consist of the high E!

The concerto was swimming about Mendelssohn's head for six years before it landed on the shore of completeness. In the meantime he constantly consulted David on technical points of interpretation, as the following interesting letter will show:

Frankfurt a. M.

19 February, 1845.

Dear David,

Very many thanks for all the trouble you are taking with my Violin concerto, and forgive me for all the time and patience it must have cost you.

The bar before the cadenza I wish not to be repeated; I put there 'Cadenza ad libitum,' by which I mean that the arpeggios can be made as long or as short as you like. If the ad libit. is not there, I will add it in correcting the proofs.

The four-part arpeggios are what I like best, with the same bowing from the beginning ff to the end pp. But if that is inconvenient, then alter them thus:

in that case, from the semiquavers onwards, by all means use a staccato bow.

Please alter the end of the first movement entirely according to your wish:

only, if not more difficult, I should naturally like it thus:

At the end [of the last movement] I would much rather take the octaves quite away. Please correct it thus:

Once more excuse all this trouble with which I bother you so; also excuse these hurried lines written in the greatest haste. Love to your wife.

Always thine,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

The autograph score, an oblong folio volume of sixty-six pages, with twelve staves to the page, and dated 'd. 16 September, 1844,' was for many years in the possession of the David family: it now belongs to Herr Ernst von Mendelssohn Bartholdy, of Berlin. The concerto was first performed, David being the soloist, at the Gewandhaus concert of March 13, 1845. Mendelssohn was absent owing to the rest cure he was following at Frankfurt: his place at the conductor's desk was taken by Niels W. Gade.

When the Leipzig Conservatorium was founded by Mendelssohn in 1843, what more natural than that David should be appointed principal professor of the violin? A splendid teacher and a thorough artist, he left the impress of his great gifts on the many pupils who passed through his class during the thirty years of his professorship. Two of his private pupils have achieved world-wide fame—Joseph Joachim and August Wilhelmj. His influence on the musical life of Leipzig was very great. As a solo performer he stood in the first rank; as first violinist in the Gewandhaus orchestra he proved himself a model Concertmeister; as leader of a string quartet he was almost unrivalled; and his aptitude for teaching amounted to genius. The influence of such a man soon became far reaching, especially as he was a pioneer. For instance, he was the first to play Bach's Chaconne in public (Gewandhaus, January 21, 1841). All honour to him for that. Outside Vienna he was the first to bring to public notice the later string quartets (including the Fugue) of Beethoven. He had a Grove-like affection for Schubert. By degrees he introduced at his concerts the best of Schubert's chamber music, to the delight of Leipzig music-lovers, who received those genius-inspired strains with enthusiasm.

As a friend of Schumann he was no less a propagandist of his chamber and orchestral music. The following extract from a letter written by David to Mendelssohn will be read with interest, if not amusement. It is dated 'Leipzig, August 4, 1841':

Yesterday Schumann came to me and treated me to an hour's silence, from which I finally gathered that he wished to bring his symphony once more before the public. He then gave me to understand—pantomimically—that he was willing to pay for a special rehearsal. After that he smoked two cigars, twice passed his hand over his mouth at the moment a remark wished to escape, took his hat, forgot his gloves, nodded to me, went first to the wrong door—then to the right—and he was gone!

The eclecticism of his taste and the wide outlook of his artistic horizon are shown in regard to the music of Brahms. It was at the David Quartet Concert given in the small hall of the (old) Gewandhaus of December 17, 1853—that Brahms, then a young man aged twenty, introduced his Sonata in C (Op. 1) and Scherzo in E flat minor (Op. 4), both for pianoforte.* As a matter of fact, at that time David was almost alone among the Gewandhaus authorities in recognizing the genius of Brahms.

Reference has already been made to David's great gifts as a teacher who, as founder of the Leipzig School, exercised great influence on violin-playing in Germany. In Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (vol. iv., p. 296b) Ferdinand David's son and pupil, Mr. Paul David, of Uppingham (see p. 449 of the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES) thus refers to his father's method:

It can hardly be said that he perpetuated in his pupils Spohr's [his master's] method and style. . . . As a teacher his chief aim was to give to his pupils a thorough command of the technique of the violin, and to arouse and develop their musical intelligence. There as elsewhere the classical works of violin literature naturally formed the main stock of teaching material. At the same time David laid great stress on the study of the modern French masters, maintaining that, irrespective of musical value, their works, being as a rule written with the aim of bringing out the capabilities of the violin, contain a large amount of useful material for technical training. The correctness of this theory is strikingly proved by Joachim, who as Boehm's pupil at Vienna, was made thoroughly familiar with the technique of the modern French school, while he studied most of his classical repertoire at Leipzig under David's guidance, and in what we may term Mendelssohn's musical atmosphere. Joachim's unlimited command over technical difficulties in music of any style, which enables him to do equal justice to Paganini and Bach, is undoubtedly largely owing to the fact that his early training was free from one-sidedness, and that he gained through the study of brilliant modern music the highest finish as well as the completest mastery.

As a creative musician there can be placed to Ferdinand David's credit five concertos, a number of variations, and other pieces for the violin. Two symphonies; an opera ('Hans Wacht'); a sextet and a quartet for strings; some songs; and concert pieces for wind instruments, including trombone solos for the great trombonist Queisser, of the Gewandhaus orchestra. But in regard to the creative side of his active and artistic life David's name will descend to posterity as the author of the famous 'Violin School' and the editor of the 'Hohe Schule des Violinspiels,' a collection of standard works written for the instrument by the old composers, a collection that marks an epoch in the development of modern violin playing.

In private life David took great delight in intellectual pursuits. A well-read man, his brain was richly stored with knowledge beyond that required in his 'daily round and common task.' Witty and humorous to a degree, he was a pleasant companion and excellent conversationalist, and a man greatly respected and beloved.

By way of conclusion two references may be made to a distinguished English pupil at the Leipzig Conservatorium during David's professorship. Writing to his father on June 4, 1859, Arthur Sullivan, then a youth of seventeen, says:

My first introduction to Liszt was last Tuesday, when Mr. David gave a grand musical matinée to which he invited me, Liszt, von Bülow (Prussian Court pianist) . . . and many other German celebrities, musical and non-musical, were there. In the evening, when nearly everyone had gone, Liszt, David, Bronsart and I had a quiet game of whist together, and I walked home with Liszt in the evening.

* An interesting account of this event will be found in Miss Florence May's 'Life of Johannes Brahms' London: Edward Arnold, 1905; vol. i., p. 140.

On August 12, 1868, Sir George Grove and Sir August Manns met David (then in London) at Sullivan's dinner table. In the course of conversation the distinguished violinist remarked, as illustrating the advance of violin technique within his recollection: 'Not many years ago there were some pieces, such as Lipinski's Military Concerto and Ernst's Hungarian Fantasia, which only two or three men in Europe could play. Now all my pupils play them!' This was spoken nearly forty years ago. What would the great teacher say now?

Ferdinand David died very suddenly on July 18, 1873, while on a mountain excursion with his children near Klosters, in the Grisons. He was buried at Leipzig, where a street has been named after him.

MUSICAL PRODIGES.

The first little girl player mentioned was Miss Cassandra Frederick, a pupil of Paradies, who was then living in London. She made her début at the age of five and a half in April, 1748, at the New Theatre in the Haymarket, and her concert was largely advertised for many days beforehand. Her friends, and the musical profession, evidently thought very highly of her, for the highest prices then to be obtained were charged for places, and two famous lady singers performed for her benefit on this and other occasions. One advertisement runs as follows:

On Monday the 10th of April at the New Theatre in the Haymarket for the Benefit of Miss Cassandra Frederick, A Child of Five years and a Half old, and a Scholar of Mr. Paradies will be performed a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental

MUSICK.

This Child will perform on the Harpsichord several lessons of Scarlatti and other Great Masters and also a Concerto of Mr. Handel's. Signora Frasi and Signora Galli will sing the Vocal, and the Instrumental Part will be performed by the Best Masters.

Pit and Boxes put together at Half a Guinea. Pit 5s.

The names of Galli and Frasi alone would have been quite enough to draw a crowded audience, for these two ladies were enormous favourites with the public then and for many years afterwards. Cassandra played in public on several occasions during the next few years, always much advertised and charging high prices for admission to her concerts. When she was about twelve years old she began to study singing, which she made her profession until she married.

One of her contemporaries, a little boy named Benjamin Hallet, was a very remarkable child. Before he was five years old it is said that he played the German flute at Drury Lane Theatre for fifty consecutive nights, and that at the age of six he could play the violoncello in such a manner as to bear a part in any concerto. Though he is known to have made his first appearance in 1748, we do not hear very much about him till 1752, when we find him in the company of a remarkable set of entertainers who were greatly in vogue just then. Early in February he gave a benefit concert thus advertised:

For the Benefit of Benjamin Hallet A Child of Nine Years of Age.

At the New Theatre in the Haymarket on Thursday next the 6th of February will be performed a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Musick. Boxes 5s. Pit 3s.

To which will be given gratis

An Old Woman's Oratory &c.

To begin at Seven o'clock.

Note: This Child three years ago performed upon the Flute at Drury Lane Theatre for 50 nights with extraordinary Skill and Applause.

In addition to this concert for himself, Benjamin had a regular engagement for certain nights in the week, when he assisted at an amazing entertainment, of which the following is the detailed programme:

By command of Noble Personages.

At the Castle Tavern in Paternoster Row this day being the 4th instant will be exhibited a Grand Concert of Musick by Gentlemen Masked after the Manner of the Grecian and Roman Comedy.

The Price of Admittance 2s. 6d.

At the same time will be opened and given gratis An Old Woman's Oratory.

To be conducted by Mrs. Mary Midnight and her Family.

To be divided into Three Acts.

Act the First will contain:

1. A Grand Piece with Drums and Trumpets.
2. Solo on the Violoncello by Cupid.
3. Inaugural Speech by Mrs. Midnight.
4. Concerto for Two Clarinettes.
5. Mr. Handel's Water Piece with a Preamble on the Kettle Drums.

Act the Second:

1. A Full Piece.
2. A Piece by Signor Bombasto.
3. The Speech of Mrs. Midnight in Defence of her existence.
4. A Solo on the Cymbalo.
5. Overture in Otho.
6. An Oration on the Salt box by a Rationalist.

Act the Third:

1. An Italian song by Signor Bombazeno.
2. A new Dissertation by Mrs. Midnight.
3. A French Horn Concerto.
4. Declamatory Piece on the Jew's Harp by a Casuist.
5. March in Judas Maccabeus with the side Drums.

With an occasional Prologue and an Epilogue to be spoken by Master Hallet in the Character of Cupid.

The Doors to be opened at Six o'clock. The Concert to begin at Seven.

The Room will be made very Warm and Illuminated with Wax Lights.

Note: The Ladies are desired to come early that they may be accommodated with the Best Seats and not be crowded as on the last four nights.

This unique company of entertainers were the rage in London for some time, and they were frequently engaged to perform at the benefit concerts of other artists, who could then make sure of the patronage of many 'Ladies of Distinction,' for whom Cupid and his violoncello had great attractions. They performed for Mr. James Lowe on the occasion of his benefit at the New Theatre in the Haymarket, and this concert took place at 12 noon, an hour that, common enough at Ranelagh, Richmond, or Greenwich, was not then usual for concerts given in London. Signor Antonio Ambrosia also engaged them for his benefit at the New Theatre, and besides Cupid and the other attractions we are promised 'A song in the character of a Lion by Signor Antonio &c.,' while an additional feature at another concert is 'A Solo of Humour on the French Horn by Mrs. Midnight's Daughter.' It is to be noted that at this particular set of concerts the room is always 'illuminated with wax lights,' and we may suppose that wax candles were only just coming into general use, having previously been reserved for the rich and noble. The first person who used them for a public entertainment appears to have been Mr. Skeggs, the French horn player, at his concert at the King's Arms Tavern in 1751, for he makes a special point of the fact in his advertisements, and no mention of anything of the kind occurs previously. Little Benjamin Hallet was very largely advertised for all these concerts and some others, and he appears to have borne the principal part in all the violoncello music. He attracted a great deal of notice from 'Persons of Quality,' for his concerts were always 'at the command of Noble Personages,' or 'at the Particular Desire of Persons of Quality.' It was no uncommon thing, in the earlier part of the century, for persons of quality to 'desire' concerts, and this points to the fact already referred to, that music then was the pastime of the upper classes only, and without their patronage the concert-giver had a very poor chance of an audience. As time went on, however, the musical public grew larger, the number of concerts increased, and it became no longer so necessary for performers to solicit the favour of some person or persons of distinction. But in certain exceptional cases, and notably where some of the prodigies were concerned, the 'Quality' made a point of desiring that their patronage of the performer should be advertised, in order that the rest of the world might understand he was under their special protection. Benjamin Hallet certainly enjoyed this distinction. His portrait was painted by Thomas Jenkins who, though only moderately successful as a painter, associated with many celebrated people, and had an interesting career. He left England about 1761 and settled in Rome, where he gave up painting as a profession and took to banking. He rose to be the chief English banker in Rome, and as he became very rich and still retained his interest in artistic matters, he took an active part in the excavations carried on in Rome at that time, and was the means of adding many treasures to the famous Townley Collection. His portrait of Hallet was engraved by Ardell, and the reproduction given here is from the copy in the possession of Mr. Arthur Hill. That the child cannot have been more than about five years old when his portrait was painted is evident from his costume, consisting of the long skirt and tight bodice worn by both little boys and little girls of very tender age.

Some of the prodigies at this time before the public were the children of professional musicians, one or two of whom had in bygone years enjoyed distinction of a similar kind. There is no doubt that these worthy people carefully fostered any budding talent that showed itself in their progeny. In 1750 three little boys, whose fathers were all distinguished musicians, made their débuts almost simultaneously. The first of these was Michael Arne, a child so versatile that it was difficult at first for his relations to decide which branch of musical or histrionic art he would finally make his own. That his gifts should have been many is not surprising when we remember the attainments of the remarkable family into which he was born. His father was the famous Dr. Arne; his aunt the fascinating Mrs. Cibber, one of the greatest singers and actresses England has ever produced; and he had an uncle who in his own young days made something of a name for himself as an actor.

Little Michael's early training was of a very varied nature, for each member of his family desired him to follow a different calling. His gifted aunt wished him to become an actor, and used her best endeavours to draw out what dramatic talent he may have had. As he had a good voice his father determined he should be a singer, and spared no pains in his training. In addition he showed at a very early age great aptitude for the organ and harpsichord, and considerable skill in composition. His acting did not fulfil his aunt's expectations, and it was first as a singer and secondly as a composer that he attracted public attention. As might have been expected he appeared in both capacities under the wing of some of the best artists of the day. Signora Galli brought him out at her benefit on April 2 at the Little Theatre in the Haymarket, when the chief item in the programme was 'A Serenata, composed by Mr. Hasse. The Vocal parts by Signor Manfredini, Master Arne and Signora Galli. The music will be performed by the Best Masters.' Hasse's compositions were very popular in London at that time both with musicians and the general public. His operas of 'Artaserse' and 'Demofoonte' always drew good houses, and his smaller compositions such as the above-mentioned Serenata and a Salve Regina composed on the occasion of his visit to England some years previously, were frequently performed at concerts. His songs too, found great favour with singers on account of their melodious beauty and the skilfully-written bravura passages. Little Michael made a good beginning at this concert; and about a fortnight later he came forward as a composer, on the occasion of Miss Falkner's benefit at Covent Garden Theatre, when the comedy of the 'Double Dealer' was performed with Quin in one of the principal parts.

As was usual in those days and until well into the 19th century, there were 'Entertainments between the Acts.' These performances generally consisted of songs by a favourite singer and a solo or concerto by a well-known instrumentalist, either a member of the regular band, or any prodigy or foreign artist who happened for the moment to be the fashion. Sometimes in addition there would be dancing—a ballet, or one of the old and complicated solo dances like the Chaconne, executed by some distinguished performer from one of the French or Italian opera houses. These Entr'acte performances served a double purpose. They kept the audience quiet and occupied during the long waits while the scenery was being changed, and they gave to a large number of people who could not go to concerts an opportunity of hearing the best players and singers then in London. On the occasion of Miss Falkner's benefit, however, the entertainment consisted chiefly of songs, she herself being a singer of good reputation, and among other items she sang 'A new Scots Song, set to music by Master Arne.' This was the famous 'Highland Laddie,' which became immensely popular and at once made a name for the little composer. It was published a few years later in a collection of English songs called 'The Flow'ret,' all of which were written by Michael Arne during his early boyhood.

The other two little boys made their first appearance together on April 3, 1750, at the New Theatre in the Haymarket. One of these, a singer, was named Thumoth, and his father had been a prodigy in his own young days. The other child, who played the harpsichord, was the son of Valentine Snow, the famous trumpeter, who from all we can gather on the subject thought so highly of his boy's attainments that he spared neither trouble nor expense on the first occasion of his appearing in public. The concert is announced as being

For the Benefit of Master Jonathan Snow, a Youth of Nine Years of Age.

The Vocal Parts by Mrs. Arne, Mr. Lowe, Mr. Reinhold and Master Thumoth. The First Violin by Mr. Collett. A Concerto on the Bassoon by Mr. Miller, a solo on the Violoncello by Mr. Gordon, a Concerto on the German Flute by Mr. Lawson, a Concerto on the Trumpet by Mr. Snow.

With several Performances on the Harpsichord by Master Snow. The whole to conclude with a Grand Piece of Musick called An Ode to Chearfulness Composed by Mr. Arne.

The children could not have had better support, for all the performers were of the first rank and great favourites with the public. Mrs. Arne, who won her reputation under her maiden name of Young, was still in the zenith of her fame. Thomas Lowe was the leading tenor, and Mr. Reinhold, though no longer young, was still the best bass of that day. Both these gentlemen were celebrated as being the first singers of some of Handel's most famous songs, and as Reinhold enjoyed the personal acquaintance of Handel for many years, it is not improbable that the great composer wrote several of his finest bass solos specially for him. Mr. Miller, Mr. Gordon, and Mr. Lawson were all artists of ability and experience, and Mr. Snow's concerto on the trumpet was certain to be one of the chief attractions of the concert. The performance began 'exactly Half an Hour past six o'clock,' and we are informed with some emphasis that: 'A Box Ticket will admit but One Person to any Part of the House.'

It was not unusual for a single-box ticket to be available for the admission of one gentleman or two ladies either to a box or any other part of the house they might prefer; but as Mr. Snow evidently anticipated a crowded audience on this occasion he decided that each ticket should admit but one individual. It was well he made this fact public in the newspapers. Had he not done so the evening's entertainment might have been marred by one of the disturbances so common in those days at the playhouses and other places of amusement, where the cheaper seats were filled with persons who certainly did not belong to the 'Quality.' These people were very frank in expressing their likes and dislikes, especially the latter, not only of the performers on the stage but also of any members of the audience who displeased them in some way or against whom they had a grudge. They took such practical means of showing their displeasure and became so intolerable, that at last the managers of Drury Lane Theatre, wearied of the complaints made to them against 'Persons in the Upper Gallery who throw down Apples, Potatoes, and other things into the Pit,' issued a public notice assuring ladies and gentlemen that 'the Managers will take all imaginable care to discover and prosecute any Person or Persons who shall disturb or insult them for the future.' They even offered a reward of ten guineas for the discovery of some one who on a certain night 'flung a hard piece of Cheese of near half a Pound in Weight from one of the Upper Galleries and greatly hurt a Young Lady in the Pit.'

We do not however hear of any such unfortunate episode on the occasion of Master Jonathan Snow's concert; that it was successful may be gathered from the fact that both he and his friend Thumoth very quickly obtained many important engagements. Little Thumoth became a great favourite at once. Everyone was anxious to secure his services, and he was engaged as one of the regular performers at Ranelagh. He also followed his father's example and played the German flute, occasionally performing on that instrument in public. But singing was his real vocation, and in 1751 he was so well practised in his art as to be able to execute the whole of the vocal music on certain occasions, as appears in the following announcement:

At the Devil Tavern Temple Bar. Tomorrow there will be an Uncommon Performance, Vocal and Instrumental. The Vocal Part by Master Thumoth of Ranelagh Gardens. And a Concerto on the German Flute by Master Thumoth. In the last Act will be introduced an Instrument never made use of in any Opera or Oratorio tho' handled with the greatest Perfection.

What this remarkable instrument was we do not know; no account of it is given, nor is any other mention of it to be found. In the course of the 18th century not a few strange instruments were invented from time to time and introduced to the public, only to be the sensation of a month or two at most, and then to disappear into the dark limbo of useless inventions.

During the musical seasons of 1751-52 the prodigies were very busy, and there were few concerts at which at least one of them did not perform. They all had benefit concerts, and on a much more ambitious scale than hitherto. These concerts were largely advertised, and in some cases the programme was printed in full, a custom that was then just creeping in and only became general in the latter half of the century. Young Michael Arne comes to the front very early in 1751. His father, satisfied no doubt with his son's successes in the previous year, determined that he should have a benefit performance of his own, and accordingly a grand Pasticcio was organized to be given at the New Theatre, Haymarket, on February 5. The term Pasticcio means literally a Pie, and the entertainment certainly justified the name, in that it was compounded of many ingredients, if we may apply a culinary expression in a musical sense. It was in reality a collection of airs, duets and other movements from different operas and by various composers strung together as a whole; sometimes, as in the present case, performed at a concert like an oratorio, sometimes at a theatre in the manner of an opera with appropriate action. It was a very favourite form of entertainment during part of the 18th century, for it enabled audiences to hear a large selection of their favourite airs from the operas without the trouble and expense of attending the performances. No doubt Mr. Arne composed this Pasticcio himself, and he engaged four of the most popular singers of the day, including his own wife. Moreover he drew up the programme in such a manner as would display his son's varied talents to the best advantage. The announcement of the entertainment and the programme are so interesting that we quote them in full:

For the Benefit of Master Arne.
At the New Theatre in the Haymarket.
This day February 5th will be performed
A Pasticcio
In Italian and English
The Vocal Parts by Signora Frasi, Signora Galli, Mr. Lowe, Mrs. Arne and Master Arne.
To be divided into Three Interludes.
After the First Interlude a New Concerto on the Organ composed by Mr. Arne and performed by Master Arne.

The Second Interlude to conclude with a New Pastoral Scene, the words from Shakespeare. Composed by Mr. Arne.

After the Third Interlude will be a Serenata written by Mr. Congreve and set to Music by Mr. Arne, called

The Judgement of Paris.

With the Chorusses Alterations and Improvements.
Paris Master Arne. Mercury Mr. Lowe. Venus Signora Frasi. Pallas Signora Galli. Juno Mrs. Arne.

The Whole to be disposed after the Manner of an Oratorio.

A List of Mr. Arne's Performance.

Act I.

1. Arne's new Overture, No. 3.
2. An Italian Song by Signora Frasi.
3. A Solo on the Hautboy by Signor Loge lately arrived.
4. Song by Signora Galli beginning Chi non ode i miei sospiri.
5. Song by Mrs. Arne composed by Mr. Handel in the opera of Alcina beginning Di cor mio.
6. Song by Master Arne composed by Signor Palma beginning Spesso mi Sento Dir.
7. A New Concerto on the Organ, composed by Mr. Arne and performed by Master Arne.

Act II.

1. Arne's new Overture No. 6.
2. An Italian Song by Signora Frasi.
3. Song by Signora Galli beginning Non a ragione ingrata.
4. Song by Mrs. Arne composed by Mr. Handel in the opera of Alcina beginning Torna mi a vaggegiar.
5. Song by Master Arne composed by Signor Hasse beginning Che furia che mostro.
6. The Pastoral Scene from Shakespear's As you like it, composed by Mr. Arne and performed by Signora Frasi, Signora Galli, Mr. Lowe, Master Arne and Chorus.

Act III.

1. Arne's new Overture No. 5.
2. The Judgement of Paris, written by Mr. Congreve, Composed by Mr. Arne, and performed by Signora Frasi, Signora Galli, Mrs. Arne, Mr. Lowe, Master Arne and Chorus.

It will be noticed that a very large proportion of the music in the Pasticcio was by Mr. Arne, and this in itself was a great attraction. His music was so fresh and spontaneous, so melodious and sparkling, so full of the atmosphere of green fields, woods, and open air generally that it appealed very strongly to English people who then, as now, preferred to take their chief pleasures out of doors.

Young Arne would appear to have pleased his audience at this performance, for in addition to his other engagements he had a second benefit in the summer at Marylebone Gardens. It was to have taken place on July 30, but was put off, 'At the particular Desire of Several persons of Quality,' till August 15. Miss Falkner came to her young friend's assistance on this occasion, and together they performed 'A New Duetto and Dialogue Composed by Mr. Arne.' Miss Falkner sang several well-known songs, Italian and English, as likewise did Master Arne; and that he had not neglected his study of composition we may see from the mention of a song 'The Highland Lassie' (being the sequel to 'The Highland Laddie') by Master Arne. Marylebone Gardens was a favourite resort, and had many attractions to tempt townspeople from their homes during the summer evenings. It was so short a distance from London that any artist who held a benefit there was sure of a full audience. The entertainments generally consisted of a concert followed by a display of fireworks, some of which, from the descriptions given, seem to have been quite as elaborate as those of the present day. There were refreshments of course—wine, punch, tea, coffee and chocolate, and a delicious kind of 'plumb' cake, which was in great request.

Our two other young friends, Masters Thumoth and Snow, were also prospering exceedingly, and gave a fine concert in April at the New Theatre in the Haymarket. It was advertised for 'the Benefit of Master Jonathan Snow, a Youth of Ten Years of Age,' and, as before, Thumoth took part in it.

The programme presents a contrast to those of Master Arne, which were eminently popular in character, while this, as we shall see, was what would nowadays be called strictly classical:

Part I. A Grand Concerto for Trumpets and French Horns. First Trumpet, by Mr. Snow.

To which will be added the Dead March in Saul.

Air. The Song and Chorus of Happy Pair from Alexander's Feast composed by Mr. Handel.

A Concerto on the Harpsichord by Master Snow.

Air. Father of Heaven, composed by Mr. Handel, sung by Signora Galli.

Concerto by Mr. Miller.

Trio:—The Flocks shall leave the Mountains, composed by Mr. Handel.

A Solo on the Harp by Mr. Gwin.

Part II. A Concerto by Mr. Collet.

Air, sung by Signora Galli.

A Concerto by Mr. Lawson.

See from the Silent Groves, composed by Dr. Pepusch, sung by Master Thumoth accompanied by Master Snow.

A Solo on the Violin by Mr. Collet.

The whole to conclude with the Coronation Anthem of God Save the King.

The spectacle of the two little friends performing together must have delighted the audience exceedingly, especially the ladies, to whose motherly hearts infant prodigies of any kind perennially appeal. The 'Ladies of Quality' frequently took some of the prodigies under their immediate protection and particularly desired their performances, especially when two of them appeared at the same concert, as happened on certain other notable occasions which at present want of space forbids our describing. Perhaps at some future time we may be allowed to return to this interesting subject, and also to illustrate the important part the prodigies played in the varied amusements of fashionable London society in the 18th century.

Occasional Notes.

Sing, maiden, sing !
 Mouths were made for singing ;
 Listen,—songs thou'lt hear
 Through the wide world ringing ;
 Songs from all the birds,
 Songs from winds and showers,
 Songs from seas and streams,
 Even from sweet flowers.

Hear'st thou the rain,
 How it gently falleth ?
 Hearest thou the bird,
 Who from forest calleth ?
 Hearest thou the bee
 O'er the sunflower ringing ?
 Tell us, maiden, now—
 Should'st thou not be singing ?

Hear'st thou the breeze
 Round the rosebud sighing ?
 And the small sweet rose
 Love to love replying ?
 So should'st thou reply,
 To the prayer we're bringing :
 So that bud, thy mouth,
 Should burst forth in singing !

BARRY CORNWALL.

The article on 'Judas Maccabæus' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April may be supplemented with the following information concerning the libretto and publication of Handel's famous oratorio. The Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission of 1897 contains a letter—in the collection of J. Eliot Hodgkin, Esq., F.S.A., of Richmond, Surrey—written by the Rev. Dr. Morell, the librettist of 'Judas Maccabæus' and other oratorios by Handel, to an unknown correspondent. Morell's letter, circa 1764, reads thus :

And now as to Oratorios:—'There was a time' (says Mr. Addison) 'when it was laid down as a maxim, that nothing was capable of being well set to music, that was not nonsense.' And this I think, though it might be wrote before Oratorio's were in fashion, supplies an Oratorio-writer (if he may be called a writer) with some sort of apology ; especially if it be considered, what alterations he must submit to, if the Composer be of an haughty disposition, and has but an imperfect acquaintance with the English language.

Handel is obviously the composer of 'haughty disposition' here referred to by Dr. Morell, who continues :

As to myself, great a lover as I am of music, I should never have thought of such an undertaking (in which, for the reasons above, little or no credit is to be gained), had not Mr. Handell applied to me, when at Kew in 1746, and added to his request the honour of a recommendation from Prince Frederic. Upon this I thought I could do as well as some who had gone before me, and within 2 or 3 days carried him the first Act of Judas Maccabæus, which he approved of. 'Well,' says he, 'and how are you to go on ?' 'Why, we are to suppose an engagement, and that the Israelites have conquered, and so begin with a chorus as or something like it.' 'No, I will have this,' and began working it, as it is, upon the Harpsicord: 'Well, go on.' 'I will bring you more to-morrow.' 'No, something now, that will do,' and immediately carried on the composition as we have it in that most admirable chorus.

"Fallen is the foe,"

"So fall thy Foes, O Lord,"

That incomparable Air Wise men, flattering, may deceive us (sic)—which was the last he composed, as Sion now his head shall raise, was his last chorus—was designed for Belshazzar, but that not being perform'd, he happily flung it into Judas Maccabæus.

N.B.—The plan of Judas Maccabæus was designed as a compliment to the Duke of Cumberland, upon his returning victorious from Scotland. I had introduced several incidents more apropos, but it was thought they would make it too long, and were therefore omitted. The Duke, however, made me a handsome present by the hands of Mr. Poyntz. The success of this Oratorio was very great, and I have often wished, that at first I had ask'd in jest, for the benefit of the 30th night instead of a 3d. I am sure he [Handel] would have given it to me: on which the [re] was above £400 in the House. He left me a legacy, however, of £200.

The date of the first publication of 'Judas Maccabæus' has not, so far as we know, been recorded. This link in the historical chain of the oratorio we can now supply. The work did not appear until nine years after Handel's death. The advertisement columns of The Public Advertiser of February 20, 1768, forecasts its issue in these terms :

MUSIC.

Proposals for Printing by Subscription, (in the same Character as the Messiah) the Complete Score of the Oratorio called Judas Maccabeus, composed by Mr. Handel: The Price to Subscribers is One Guinea and a Half: One Guinea to be paid at the Time of Subscribing, and Half a Guinea more on the Delivery of the Book, which will be at Michaelmas next.

N.B. After the Subscription is closed, none will be sold under Two Guineas.

Subscriptions are taken in by Mess. Randall & Abell's, Successors to the late Mr. Walsh, in Catherine-street, in the Strand.

A similar advertisement appeared in The Public Advertiser of October 1, 1768, which contained a N.B. to the following effect :

Those Ladies and Gentlemen who intend to encourage this Work, are desired to send in their Names by the 15th Inst., as the Subscription will be then closed, after which none will be sold under Two Guineas.

The announcement—which stated that William Randall was 'Successor to the late Mr. Walsh'—thus referred to the delay in the publication of the work :

☞ An unforeseen Accident has happened which has retarded the Publication of it this Michaelmas, as first intended.

The advertisement notifying the actual publication of the oratorio must be given in full: it is from The Public Advertiser of January 10, 1769 :

MUSIC.

Now ready to deliver to the Subscribers.

The Complete Score of the Oratorio of JUDAS MACCABÆUS.

Printed for William Randall, Successor to the late Mr. Walsh, in Catherine-street, in the Strand.

N.B. Those Ladies and Gentlemen who have been so kind as to encourage this Work, are desired to send back their Receipts, with the second Subscription, when their Books will be delivered as above.

Where may be had,

The Complete Scores of Messiah, Samson, Alexander's Feast, and Acis and Galatea. Likewise all Mr. Handel's Works, With the greatest Variety of Music, of all Kinds, and of every Body's Printing.

'Kate knocking at the door' is the title given to the opening theme, and that fateful, awesome spell is sustained throughout.

The above information is furnished by a newspaper published at a University town (in England), and forms part of the notice of a concert at which Beethoven's fifth Symphony was played. Poor Kate!

FROM THE MUSICAL TIMES OF FIFTY YEARS AGO :

MADAME CLARA SCHUMANN gave a pianoforte recital on the 17th June. This was the programme :—Variations in E $\flat$ , on a theme from the Eroica Symphony, by Beethoven ; Two divertimentos (Op. 17), and Suite de Pièces (No. 1, Op. 24), by Sterndale Bennett ; Variations on 'Aus dem bunten Blättern' of Robert Schumann, by Clara Schumann ; Sarabande and Gavotte (in the style of Bach), by Johannes Brakens ; Clavierstück in A major, by Scarlatti ; Carneval (scenes mignonnes, Op. 9), by R. Schumann. At the end of each piece, the audience gave unequivocal marks of satisfaction. Madame Schumann's own piece is very pretty, and very difficult ; it is on a most melodious theme, and was beautifully played. At the end of the concert, Madame Schumann responded to the universal re-demand, by again playing Scarlatti's Clavierstück, which was well fitted to conclude such a concert, being a wonderful piece of interpretation and execution.—The Musical Times, July, 1856.

'Who is Johannes Brakens?' the reader may be inclined to ask. The only answer is that Brakens is a misprint—which will happen even in the best-regulated journals—for Brahms! We have every reason to believe that this was the first public performance of Brahms's music in England. The Musical World, in a notice of the recital (which took place at the Hanover Square Rooms), said: 'The Sarabande of the "new man," Johannes Brahms, is extremely difficult, extremely uncouth, and not at all "in the style of Bach."' Thus spake J. W. D., including the italics.

The tribute paid to English art by the Société des Grandes Auditions Musicales de France by giving the first performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' in France, has been confirmed by the notices of that performance in the Paris newspapers, from which some extracts are subjoined. It will be remembered that the work was given at the Palais du Trocadéro, Paris, on May 25, by the above-named Society—of which La Comtesse Greffulhe is the Présidente—and that the performance was under the able direction of M. Camille Chevillard :

The choral part is of great importance. It is treated with certainty and ample sonority, and the final chorus crowns the work with a brilliant and majestic ensemble. . . . But what one hardly knows how to praise sufficiently is the singularly elevated poetical feeling which distinguishes the work, the calmness and serenity which is indicated throughout. After 'Parsifal' and the 'Beatitudes' there is no other work in which the religious sentiment has been expressed in terms more touching. Perhaps the simplicity of the means employed by Sir Edward Elgar to arrive at this end, and the sincerity of his work, are precisely the most indispensable qualities to express this sort of sentiment.—Le Figaro.

This very remarkable work obtained a most distinct success. Its inspiration is always elevated without ceasing to be, so to speak, 'human.' Its style is pure without being pretentious. The choral part is treated with real power, and the chorus of demons notably is charged with remarkable fury and highly coloured.—Le Soir.

The musical feeling of the whole work is very sympathetic. The prelude is poignant and sorrowful, the chorus of demons is demoniacal, and that of the angels, angelic. The intercession of the Angel of the Agony has power and grandeur, and the sonority of the work is enriched by the remarkably skilful use of the organ.—Echo de Paris.

Sir Edward Elgar's setting of this purely mystical poem is perhaps the only truly religious work which we have been permitted to hear since the 'Beatitudes.' . . . One cannot fail to recognize and praise the sincerity and nobility of its inspiration. The music expresses scrupulously and with a feeling of respect the piety of the poem on which it comments and which it embellishes.—Le Courrier Musical.

A Yorkshire choir of 300 voices—supplied in equal numbers from the Leeds Choral Union and the Sheffield Musical Union—will shortly give three oratorio performances in Germany. At Cologne and Frankfurt 'The Dream of Gerontius' is to be given on September 24 and 27 respectively. Between those dates (on September 25) the Yorkshire chorals will show the good Düsseldorfers how 'The Messiah' is sung in England, the selection of Handel's immortal work having been made by a leading musician in Düsseldorf. Dr. Henry Coward will conduct all three performances. The financial success of the enterprise is assured and its business organization is not a little due to Mr. Henry C. Embleton, of Leeds. We understand that the Burgomasters and other civic authorities of the cities to be visited are taking a great and practical interest in this latest instance of a desire to promote friendly feeling between the nations through the divine art of music.

Who is Richard Nordraak? Very few musical dictionaries mention his name. And yet, if we are to believe Mr. Björnsterne Björnson, Nordraak was a Norwegian musician of genius who might have achieved great things if an early death had not removed him. He gave Norway her National Anthem, which fact suffices to make his name dear to his native land, and his grave a sacred spot to Norwegians. He lies buried far away from Norway's fjords, in the Jerusalem Churchyard at Berlin, and in the last week in May a monument erected to his memory by his countrymen was unveiled. Björnson, who wrote the words of the Norwegian National Anthem, spoke the memorial oration, in which, after pronouncing the customary panegyric to the gifted composer, he made a very interesting statement of an autobiographical nature. He said: 'Nordraak's death completely altered my plan of life. My mind was filled with the old Icelandic battle-songs and pictures from the ancient Northern Mythology. It was my intention out of this material to create, in conjunction with the deceased, great dramas, for which he was to supply the music. His early death frustrated those plans. Afterwards Richard Wagner used the same sources for his works. But though I am not learned in musical matters, I must say that in my opinion Wagner has failed to hit upon the right thing in his presentation of Germanic Mythology. He has imparted a sensual sentimentality to it which is alien to its nature. However, that which does not come at its proper time can never come.' The famous Norwegian poet may be correct in his criticism of Wagner's masterpiece, but if the 'right thing' had been hit upon, would not the world have lost some of its most marvellous music? It should be remembered that Grieg dedicated his Funeral March in A minor to the memory of Richard Nordraak.

The following is from a newspaper issued in a western city bristling with activities. In reproducing the extract we have ventured to print one word in italics :

Many memories gather around Canterbury Theatre, some of which are alluded to—especially those connected with its library and organ matters—in an article which opens the current number of 'The Musical Times.'

Those many memories !

Notices of the Handel Festival performances, the British-Canadian Festival concert, and the concerts of the Vienna Philharmonic Society, announced to be held during the last week of June, must be deferred till our August issue.

HANDEL'S INFLUENCE ON BACH.

In the natural course of things a successful, popular artist is likely to influence those of his contemporaries whose merits have not yet been recognized, or whose powers require more time to mature. To take a single instance, Marlowe, though but by a couple of months the senior, is generally allowed to have pointed out the path to Shakespeare. Remembering then that Handel, born a few weeks before Bach, became famous at an early age, and that Bach was a diligent student and collector of music, we may wonder whether fortune brought many of Handel's early works under the notice of his contemporary.

It is stated that a copy of Handel's 1716 'Passion' exists, partly in the handwriting of Bach, and partly in that of his second wife, and that he wrote out the parts of a concerto and a cantata, which have been pronounced to be Handel's—(Spitta, Eng. trans. ii. 11). In two places—once in a cantata, 'Herr, gehe nicht ins Gericht,' and once in the Prelude 22 of the 'Forty-eight' (Bk. I.) bars 20-22—Spitta thinks that Bach had passages of these works in his mind (ii. 426). There is reason, however, for believing that other compositions of Handel's also came into Bach's hands.

Living at Hamburg, Handel produced a 'Passion' Music, apparently in 1704, and 'Almira,' the first of several operas, at the beginning of 1705. Towards the end of 1705 Bach obtained a month's leave of absence from Arnstadt to visit Lübeck, from thirty to forty miles N.E. of Hamburg. He stayed away, however, for four months; so that whether he remained all the time at Lübeck, or spent part of the time at Hamburg, a town to which he had paid several previous visits, he must at least have heard a good deal about Handel, for 'Almira' had achieved a striking success. In 1720 Bach visited Hamburg again. Are there any indications that he had made use of his opportunities?

Handel's early 'Passion'—the authenticity being here taken as admitted—is a setting of the text of St. John, chapter 19, with a few inserted airs and duets, and a final chorus, the words being the production of Postel, of Hamburg. Bach's 'St. John' Passion (first version probably about 1724) is a similar setting of St. John, chapters 18 and 19, with airs, &c., having words partly based on the Passion poem by Brockes, and partly, as is supposed, the work of Bach himself, or of some amateur verse-maker. However, three of these reflective pieces, 'Windet euch nicht' (omitted later), the chorale 'Thy bonds, O Son of God,'* and the air, 'It is finished,' are found to resemble in idea the airs of Handel, inserted at precisely the same places. The six-line chorale ('Thy bonds, O Son of God, most high') is, in fact, with the exception of one word, identical with Handel's text. Unless these lines are traditional, it becomes certain that Bach knew Postel's libretto, and highly likely that he knew Handel's music also.

Little room for doubt, however, is left when we examine the corresponding choruses. The first, 'We salute Thee,' are both in B flat major. Bach's has a stately, flowing theme, but at bar 7 changes to a more rhythmical phrase:

Handel happens to introduce practically the same phrase—a slight modification of a previous instrumental phrase—over the same bass at his bar 7, in the corresponding treble voice. The difference in accent is more apparent than real—see Chrysander's introduction.

The next choruses, 'Crucify,' are both in G minor, and both start off with a chord of the 6th. Here are the main features of the opening in each:

Ex. 2.

VI. HANDEL.
Cru - ci - fy, Cru - ci - fy,
(said) Cru - ci - fy, Cru - ci - fy, &c.

Bach also answers at once (in the tenor) beginning on D, the movement not being a fugue. Handel's chorus is very short; Bach's is extended.

The third parallel choruses, 'We have a law,' have nothing in common. Bach would probably notice that the principal feature of Handel's (C minor) is the progression of the bass at the part describing Christ's alleged offence—a descent, first partial from B flat, then a complete octave down the minor scale in C, followed by an upward ascent, including semitones between dominant and tonic. Now in his (Bach's) own chorus 'If this man were not an evil-doer,' slightly preceding those we are considering, the bass starts off in D minor with a somewhat similar semitonic ascent, followed by a partial descent, and then at once repeats the passage in C minor, with here a practically complete minor scale descent. There are of course great differences, and the idea is not recondite; but it would at least direct Bach's attention rather to a later chorus of Handel's—'We have no king but Caesar.' In 'We have a law' Bach's fugue is in F; Handel's is in G minor (with the old signature of one flat). Bach's entries run from bass to treble; Handel's from treble to bass. Here are parts of the bass entries:

Ex. 4.

HANDEL.
Wir ha-ben kein-en Kö-nig denn den . . .
BACH.
Wir haben ein Gesetz, und nach
We have a law, and by

Curiously enough both are irregular, though Bach's bass is the first statement of the subject. Handel finishes the chorus with a phrase:

Ex. 6.

HANDEL.
Wir haben keinen König, keinen Kö-nig denn den Kai - ser

* The title references are to Bach's 'St. John' Passion, Novello's octavo edition.

Not only does Bach end with this (in the major), varying the conclusion slightly, but he uses it all through the chorus as a counterpoint, varying the ending, but keeping the length, and finishing with three crotchets; it is unexpectedly jubilant, and the words have to be partially repeated to attain the length.

At the fourth chorus-parallelism ('If thou let this man go') Bach prefers to repeat the preceding chorus a semitone lower (E major), the three crotchets here happening to fall to the word 'Kaiser.' This causes his fifth chorus to be in F sharp minor, while Handel's fifth number is in D minor, but in each case the tonality is ill-defined. The styles of the ejaculations 'Away with Him,' at the opening are very similar—note in particular the upward leap of an octave between the fourth and fifth notes of the opening treble phrase in each. Both choruses commence at the second quaver of the bar (quadruple time). At the fourth bar in each 'Crucify' is introduced.

Handel's sixth chorus, 'Wir haben keinen König,' having been already used, Bach falls back for his sixth number, 'We have no King but Cæsar,' on a little four-bar chorus, used three times before.

For the seventh, 'Write thou not the king of the Jews,' Bach prefers, not very happily, to repeat the chorus 'We salute thee king.' Yet Handel's seventh is apparently not overlooked. The key (for the only time) is C major. Bach's eighth chorus ('Let us not divide') is (for the only time) in C major. Handel's tenors and practically his basses begin with the equivalent of six quavers on C. The subject of Bach's eighth begins in the bass with six quavers on the upper C. This chorus is a close fugue with a very long subject, the last section being separated from the other portion by a crotchet rest. And it happens that Handel's corresponding eighth chorus resembles a close fugue (in D minor) with a long subject, in which, though at a different and perhaps more natural place, a crotchet rest occurs. There seems nothing appropriate in the form; if intended to represent indivisibility, why any break at all? Bach's introduction of the full string band during the course of the alto air 'It is finished' may have been suggested by the introduction of the string band in the course of Handel's air in the same place.

Bach's closing chorus ('Rest here in peace') has only the slight resemblance of words to Handel's 'Schlafe wohl.' The latter fine chorus, however, has another interest, through the use of the last inversion of the German 6th in G minor at the close of the first section. It may be remembered that this rare chord is used at the end of the 'Crucifixus' of the B minor mass with the words 'et sepultus est' (G major). This might well pass as an accident, if the persisting figure of the immediately preceding 'Et incarnatus est' were not so decidedly like the figure which persists through the air a few numbers back in Handel's 'Passion,' 'Jesus, wherefore thirstest Thou?':

The thirst is perhaps the most striking indication of humanity in the Passion accounts. And it may be noticed that after a couple of ejaculations Handel's first voice phrase, 'Jesu, wornach dürstet dich?' is practically the descent of an octave, occupying just the same time as Bach's opening octave descent.

The gradual rise too of a fourth in four of the voices at 'et homo factus est' corresponds to the somewhat similar rise of a fourth, occurring at the same place in Handel's air.

Here then we have a series of resemblances, hardly a single one of capital importance, but scarcely all explicable as due to accidental coincidence. This work of Handel's, it must be remembered, was criticised by Mattheson in 1725, and might well have served as a model for avowed imitation, whether by Bach, or by anyone else, just as Purcell's simpler music was in front of Handel when he wrote the Utrecht Te Deum and Jubilate. That a theme or two should have been taken over at the same time is a matter of little moment, such being apparently the custom of the age; the real obligation is to be found in the similarity of character, and in the incentive to Bach to put forth his powers.

Church and Organ Music.

THE QUADRUPLE CHANT.

The inventor of the quadruple chant appears to have been Michael Maybrick, a former organist of St. Peter's Church, Liverpool (now the Cathedral). The son of William Maybrick, for many years parish clerk of the aforesaid church, he was born at Liverpool in 1799 and studied under Richard Wainwright. After having held the organistship of St. Mark's Church in that city, in 1827 he obtained a similar appointment at St. Peter's Church, a post he held till his death on May 23, 1846. That he had a voice is proved by the fact that his name appears among the chorus-tenors at the York Musical Festival of 1825. In Brown and Stratton's 'British Musical Biography' he is credited with having been organist and conductor of the Liverpool Choral Society and of having composed 'Twelve voluntaries for the organ, composed in a free style, and founded on church melodies,' of which no copy appears to be at the British Museum, nor of his pianoforte arrangements. His nephew, Mr. Michael Maybrick, J.P., the well-known song composer, writes us in response to an inquiry concerning his uncle: 'I have no recollection of him, but I do know that he was a clever and sound musician, one who wrote a great deal—anthems, fugues, &c.—and, as you say, he was the inventor of the quadruple chant. He was also, for those days, well skilled in writing for the orchestra. What became of his MSS. I do not know; but as a boy I remember seeing them in large quantities. He certainly was a man very much respected.' In or about the year 1825 Michael Maybrick published an oblong quarto chant book entitled:

A COLLECTION OF CHANTS | Composed and arranged for Four Voices | with an accompaniment for the | Organ or Piano Forte | by MICHAEL MAYBRICK, organist, | and | respectfully inscribed, by permission, to the | Rev. the Rectors of Liverpool.

London : Published and sold for the Author by the Royal Harmonic Institution, Argyll Rooms, 246, Regent Street | Price 5s. [1825?]

In this somewhat scarce book—of which Mr. John S. Bumpus possesses a copy—chants Nos. 1 and 2 are both quadruple. Here is No. 1, a chant very little known, certainly not in its original form :

No. 1.—TE DEUM. M. MAYBRICK.

Joule altered and reprinted the chant in his collection, and a garbled version of it has appeared elsewhere.

About the same time that Maybrick's book is said to have appeared Dr. John Camidge, of York, published his volume of 'Cathedral Music'—it was certainly issued after June, 1825. This collection also contained a quadruple chant which we also rescue from more or less oblivion :

No. 50. CHANT FOR THE 15TH EVENING OF THE MONTH.
4th verse.

The chants in both Maybrick's and Camidge's books are printed in score with an organ accompaniment.

The quadruple chant is now mostly used for Psalm lxxviii., sung on the fifteenth evening of the month. In this connection it is amusing to read the opinion of a writer in the Parish Choir. This gentleman—who signed himself 'Aliquis'—in describing the services at Trinity College, Cambridge, in the year 1848, said :

The worthy Professor [Walmisley] it seems is not even satisfied with double chants, for he has manufactured a piece of music which he is pleased to call a quadruple chant, that is, one that goes to four verses, and this is inflicted upon us every fifteenth evening of the month.

This quadruple chant appeared in a book entitled :

The Collection of Chants, with the Responses In use at the Chapels of King's, Trinity, and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge, the voice parts in score with an accompaniment for the Organ or Piano Forte arranged by THOMAS ATTWOOD WALMSLEY, M.A., Trin. Coll., Professor of Music in the University and Organist of Trinity and St. John's Colleges.

London Sacred Music Warehouse, published (for the Editor) by J. A. Novello, 69, Dean Street, Soho, and 24, Poultry. [1845.]

Here is the 'manufactured piece of music' which found no favour with 'Aliquis' :

15th Ev. T. A. WALMSLEY.

The best known of all quadruple chants is that composed by the late Sir Herbert Oakeley. The 'Life' of that musician, compiled by his brother Mr. E. M. Oakeley, furnishes us with information regarding the origin of the familiar strain—'the one and only quadruple chant,' according to the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins. Oakeley was in the habit of spending his vacations at Canterbury at a time when 'the excellent and jovial Mr. Stratton' was precentor. This jocose cleric induced the young composer to try his hand at various forms of composition, including the E flat service and the quadruple chant. This was in 1853, when Oakeley was twenty-three years old, and the chant has remained in use at Canterbury ever since. Precentor Stratton used laughingly to say that were it dropped 'there would be mutiny in Precincts and City.'

In the absence of definite information, there is always some risk in stating when and where a hymn-tune or chant first appeared in print; so with Oakeley's Quadruple chant. An advertisement in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1863, furnishes evidence of what appears to be the earliest publication; it reads thus:

Quadruple Chant for the Fifteenth Evening of the Month (with alternation of unison and harmony), by H. S. Oakeley. In use at the Cathedrals of Canterbury, Norwich, Peterborough, Rochester and Bristol, and at the Sunday Evening Special Services at St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey, also at the Temple Church, and at Cambridge, &c. Just published by Novello and Co., Dean-street, Soho. Price 1s. per dozen copies.

The chant also appeared in the Rev. William Windle's 'Church and Home Metrical Psalter,' published in the same year, 1863. From the above advertisement it may be assumed that previous to 1863 the chant was sung at various cathedrals, &c., either from manuscript or privately printed copies. Perhaps some of our readers could furnish additional information on this point.

The thirty-sixth annual festival service of the London Gregorian Choral Association was held at St. Paul's Cathedral on June 21, with Dr. Warwick Jordan at the organ. The service, which commenced with the Rev. J. Baden Powell's processional hymn 'Hail! festal day!' included Berthold Tours's anthem 'Praise God in His holiness.'

The new organ in the Town Hall, Wellington, New Zealand, was opened by Mr. J. Maughan Barnett on March 6 in the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience presided over by the Mayor. Mr. Barnett gave two additional recitals on March 8 and 10 with similar success. The organ, which is of splendid tone, has been built by Messrs. Norman & Beard.

The choirs of St. John's, St. Peter's and All Saints' churches, Eastbourne, were combined in a musical service at the first-named church on May 30, the main features of which were the renderings of Goetz's psalm, 'By the waters of Babylon,' and the chorus 'Blessed Jesu' from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.' The service was accompanied by a full orchestra. Mr. Gilbert Alcock conducted, and Mr. Francis Donne and Mr. Selfe Fowles were at the organ.

The Chelmsford Association of Church Choirs held its 40th annual festival service at the Parish Church on May 31, when the combined choirs numbered 300 voices. The service included Stainer's anthem 'I am Alpha and Omega,' and his Service in F, while the processional hymn 'Lift we now our hearts' was sung to music by Dr. C. W. Pearce. Dr. G. F. Huntley was at the organ and Mr. F. R. Frye, organist of Chelmsford Parish Church, conducted.

A choral festival-service, in which seven choirs took part, was held on May 31 in St. Paul's Church, Princes Park, Liverpool. The music sung included Stanford's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat, Stainer's Te Deum in E flat, and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' (solo by Master Collier, of the cathedral choir). Mr. F. H. Burstall, organist of the pro-cathedral, conducted, and the accompaniments were sustained by organ (Mr. W. A. Roberts), three brass instruments and drums.

The annual festivals of the Nonconformist Choir Union (conductor, Mr. E. Minshall) and the London Sunday School Choir (conductors, Mr. J. Wellard Mathews and Mr. William Whiteman) were respectively held at the Crystal Palace on June 16 and 20 with their customary success. On the former occasion a new sacred cantata, entitled 'Nicodemus,' by Mr. Arthur Berridge was performed in the concert room under the composer's direction. Choral competitions were interesting features of both these festivals.

The necessary funds for providing a practically new organ for Bristol Cathedral, on an appeal issued about two years ago, have now been subscribed, and the Dean and Chapter have therefore been able to enter into a contract with Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, of London, for the execution of the work.

The important appointment of Organist to the Melbourne City Council is now vacant. Full particulars concerning the filling up of the post will be found in our advertisement columns.

Reviews.

A Treatise on strict Counterpoint. Part I. Counterpoint in two or three parts. By Francis Edward Gladstone. No. 68 of Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

'Teachers would not act unwisely if they abandoned the existing custom of giving instruction in four-part harmony before their pupils have learnt to write correctly in two and three parts.' Although these words are the last in the book now before us they must be those that are first quoted, as showing the sure foundation upon which Dr. Gladstone builds. Thoroughness and a good grounding he regards as absolutely essential in the study of counterpoint. Moreover, Dr. Gladstone, speaking with a contrapuntal experience of forty-five years, holds fast to the belief that the strict style is the safest road upon which the pupil should travel. Those, and there are many, who agree with him will find that the author of this primer points the way in language that is free from ambiguity and thus guides the student in paths that are safe and free from pitfalls. The concluding portion of this lucid and distinctly practical exposition of counterpoint will be anticipated with interest.

Elgar. By Ernest Newman. The 'Music of the Masters' series. [John Lane.]

Entirely non-biographical in its scope, this excellent little book is a welcome contribution to musical literature. If Mr. Ernest Newman is a writer with whom agreement is often impossible, no one can question his sincerity and ability as a musical critic. In these lucidly written pages the author analyses all the published works of Sir Edward Elgar, ranging from the Romance for violin and orchestra (Op. 1) to the Concert-overture 'In the South' (Op. 50). Conveniently arranged under chapters whereby the various compositions are classified, the analyses are followed by a chapter on 'Elgar and programme music' and a list of the published works. Mr. Newman is not the only musician who holds the opinion that the Enigma variations 'were practically the first work in which Elgar's genius was made fully manifest.' In this connection he goes on to say: 'From that time many people put him in the front rank of contemporary musicians, and each subsequent work of his had to be judged by the standard not of English music only, but of the world's music.' The concluding words (apart from the Appendix) of the book may be quoted as an example of Mr. Newman's style:

The occasionally quoted remark that he 'has not yet attained a distinctive style' is a fiction, based on imperfect acquaintance with his work: to those who know that work there is scarcely any composer whose distinctive style can be so readily recognized as Elgar's. Any two consecutive pages of his have a stamp that enable us at once to name their author. In one department—that of orchestration—he may be said to be without a superior; his scoring is remarkable for its beauty even in these days, when to score well is a quite common gift. He treats the orchestra as one who loves and respects it, while Strauss, no less ardent, sometimes dissembles his love by kicking the object of his affection downstairs. Elgar is not, as we have seen, a predestined vocal composer; nor, on the other hand, does he handle the symphonic form with perfect mastery throughout. He is at his best either when he gets a fine poetic text that burns like a flame within him—as in Gerontius—or when he is working at a kind of necklet of gems—as in the Variations—where all his finest qualities of imagination, fancy, feeling, and technique have free play, and where the miniature form absolves him from the necessity of running on for a single moment after he has become tired. So much for the Elgar of the past; it will be interesting to watch the development of the Elgar of the future.

It is hardly necessary to say that this latest book on Sir Edward Elgar is one that should attract many readers. The text is copiously illustrated with musical examples, one of which, by-the-way (No. 120, on p. 170) has a topsy-turvy time-signature.

Catalogue of Manuscript Music in the British Museum.

By Augustus Hughes-Hughes, Assistant in the Department of MSS. Vol. I. Sacred Vocal Music.

The need has long been felt of a catalogue of the manuscript music preserved at the British Museum. In 1842 such a compilation, prepared by the late Thomas Oliphant, was published and procurable. The growth of the collection during the intervening sixty-four years has been so extraordinary that the preparation of an adequate catalogue must be a task positively Herculean in its achievement. For the industry stamped on every page of this welcome book of reference (615 pages) too much praise cannot be given to its compiler, Mr. Hughes-Hughes, in whose hands the entire work—this and its companion two volumes (yet to be issued)—has been placed.

As Vol. I. of this great undertaking has only just been published, it is too early to pass judgment on its accuracy. Only by putting such a book to the severe test of constant reference—and this we hope to do—can its merits or demerits, if any, be estimated. In a non-microscopical glance at the pages of this classified catalogue a few things have come under notice which need attention. For instance, in Samuel Wesley's 'All go to one Place' (p. 98), it might have been stated that the anthem was composed for the funeral of his brother Charles (died May 23, 1834), instead of the vague information 'about 1832 (watermark).' If (on p. 382) the reference 'these accompaniments' is to Mozart's additions to the 'Messiah,' which by inference it is, then the date—'30th Jan. 1813'—of their first performance in England is wrongly given: as was pointed out in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1899, the actual date is March 29, 1805, eight years earlier than that which is invariably stated. The Rev. William Felton (p. 92 and Index of names) was a vicar-choral, not organist of Hereford Cathedral; and among misprints 'Miss Hockett' should be Miss Hackett' (p. 97 and Index), and 'Edward,' not Edmund, was the first Christian name of Dr. E. J. Hopkins (p. 600).

While we must reserve final judgment on this great undertaking until its completion, we venture to offer a few remarks on the method of the catalogue, basing these observations on the practical working by a busy man of such sources of reference, and in the spirit of friendly criticism. Perhaps less apology is needed for this critical excursion from the fact that two more volumes—'Secular Vocal Music' and 'Instrumental Music, &c.'—are still in the preparatory stage. It may seem rank heresy to take exception to any system of cataloguing adopted at the British Museum, but it is a question whether every entry should not be self-contained by the insertion of the composer's name after the title of a work instead of 'By the same' [composer], a formula which incurs a certain amount of risk in pages which are crowded with entries. Again, it is not altogether satisfactory to find such incompleteness as (p. 93) 'For a further description of the MS., see under "Organ Music."' Now as Vol. III., which is to contain 'Organ Music,' may not appear for a year or two, this method hardly justifies the statement made in the Preface—signed by Dr. Warner, Keeper of the MSS.—that 'each volume will be . . . complete in itself.'

And then in regard to that all-important matter, the Indexes. Why, we venture to ask, has not the strictly alphabetical method been followed, as in the Catalogue of 1842? In that modest volume 'Henry VIII.' and 'Elizabeth' are rightly given under their initial letters and not buried under 'England, Sovereigns of, etc.'; here as elsewhere, cross-references, the salvation of all indexing, would have saved the situation without breaking what is apparently the British Museum 'rule.' The same remark not only applies to 'France, Sovereigns of,' 'Germany, Emperors of,' and 'Prussia, Kings of,' but to 'Societies, Musical, English,' or 'German,' as the case may be. Who, in making a rapid reference, would think of looking for 'Catch Club,' 'Royal Society of Musicians' and similar organizations—to mention two out of seven English societies here noted—under such a heading as 'Societies, Musical, English.'? Here again cross-references are absolutely necessary. The Index of Names records the former owners (where known) of the

MSS. in the Museum; but in this respect the page of the volume is not given! One has to find the information by a double reference—(i.) the Index itself and then (ii.) through the maze of figures constituting the 'Table of Manuscripts' (17 pages) at the beginning of the volume.

We have dwelt at some length on this Index matter because of its great importance in all books of reference—of such importance that too much care and thought cannot be given to it. While we make no attempt to dictate the form in which an index should be cast, quick and easy reference is what one wants. Indexers may theorise as much as they please, but they have been the cause of endless loss of time through their vagaries. If they would earn our gratitude and sweeten our tempers they should make the fullest use of cross-references and other means of short cuts for those who travel in the research country.

The Village Organist. Books 40, 41 and 42. Edited by F. Cunningham Woods.

[Novello &amp; Co., Ltd.]

The first of this trio of books is of special interest in that it includes a charming little Fugue by Sir John Goss and an Air by the Rev. William Felton. Modern composers are represented by Dr. Brewer, who contributes a tranquil Prelude, Dr. Botting, as the composer of a pleasing Réverie, while Mr. John E. West and Dr. Cuthbert Harris are respectively responsible for a Lament and an Andante sostenuto. Three other pieces complete the selection. Book 41 opens with an Allegro pomposo by Mr. Thomas Adams, which will be found very useful as a concluding voluntary, as will an arrangement of 'And Israel saw that great work' (Handel). An old-time organist is recalled in a soft voluntary by John Bennett, a contemporary of Handel, and there are arrangements of movements from 'Paradise and the Peri' (Schumann), 'King Saul' (PARRY) and 'Redemption' (Gounod). With one exception—'Angels, ever bright and fair'—all the voluntaries in Book 42 are original pieces for the organ. Merkel and Hesse are names that command respect: the work of the former is here exemplified in a Postludium in D, and the latter with his familiar Andante in F. Three 20th century English composers furnish proof of their creative musicianship in an Allegretto giocoso in A (Mr. Ernest A. Dicks), a Romance in the same key (Dr. Markham Lee), and a Pastorella in B flat (Mr. F. A. Challinor). As throughout this series of organ voluntaries, the practical needs and capabilities of many organists have been considered in these latest instalments of a work that need not be, nor is it, restricted to village organists. We understand that a Harvest festival book of voluntaries is in a forward state of preparation, and that this is to be followed by similar books for various Church seasons—Christmas, Lent, &c.

NEW PART-SONGS.

Lullaby. Words by Leslie Holdsworth Allen. Music by Arnold R. Mote.

A wink from Hesper. Words by W. H. Henley.
A ballad. Words by Lady Lindsay. Music by Theo Wendt.

[Novello &amp; Co., Ltd.]

If Mr. Arnold R. Mote's 'Lullaby' were sung to a musical prodigy it would certainly keep such an one wide awake, for it is charming music that excites attention rather than soothes the senses to unconsciousness. It is intended to be sung unaccompanied, and the part-writing is closely knit—as it should be under these circumstances. The harmonization is rich, and there are several opportunities for a well-trained body of vocalists to make special effects in pianissimo singing. 'A wink from Hesper' is not a comic ditty. The 'wink' is allegorical. In fact it is a 'blink,' or to be correct a single twinkle from the star to which a lover compares a word of solace from his beloved, from whom he is torn by unkind Fate. The composer has set the lines simply, briefly and delicately, and the result is extremely pleasing. Lady Lindsay's 'Ballad' is tragic in character, and is Maeterlinckish in its terse suggestiveness of grief and woe. A knight rides up to a farmhouse door and is given a drink of cool water. 'He drained it all,' and then in the next verse 'The maid in her bower sits weeping,' and 'On the hill side dark a knight lies stark.' The composer has written for eight vocal parts which will require careful rehearsal, for the phases of sentiment in the lines are closely followed, and there result rapid changes of tempo and demands for variety of tone colour. Above all dramatic perception is a necessity, but the composer's requirements being realized the part-song may be relied upon to hold attention and excite esteem for the executants.

NEW TRIOS FOR FEMALE VOICES.

Gentle Spring. Words by Longfellow. Music by Joseph Holbrooke.

Hark! how the ripples gurgle with glee. Words by Paul Seer. Music by G. Coleman Young.

When Summer dies. Words by Arthur G. Wright. Music by B. Luard-Selby.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Time was when the supply of music specially written for female voices was limited, but there is now a considerable repertory of charming music from which to choose. The recent additions to this series are clever and attractive examples of how effective this class of music can be made. Mr. Holbrooke's part-song 'Gentle Spring' is a gay and graceful composition. The voice parts are so designed as to secure variety, and the pianoforte accompaniment while duly sustaining the voices possesses so much independence as to greatly increase the interest of the ensemble. If Mr. Young's setting of 'Hark! how the ripples gurgle with glee' is less original than the music to 'Gentle Spring,' it is extremely melodious and is easier to read. The pianoforte accompaniment is well designed and the harmonic scheme equally well balanced. The lines of 'When Summer dies' breathe the gentle melancholy which comes with the approach of autumn, but the poet concludes with the consoling reflection that though the glowing beauties of Nature may fade 'love will warm our hearts whate'er betide,' and so gives the composer an opportunity for an effective contrast at the close. The vocal parts are flowing in character and grateful to sing, but the accompanist's right-hand in this instance will want to know what his left hand is doing.

Obituary.

The death, which we record with regret, of WILLIAM YEATES HURLSTONE, on May 30, removes one of the most gifted of young English composers. Born in London on January 7, 1876, Mr. Hurlstone gave early indications of his creative genius in that, at the age of nine, he published a set of five waltzes, although he had never had any tuition in composition, his only teacher having been his mother, who gave him some pianoforte lessons. In 1898, aged eighteen, he gained a composition scholarship at the Royal College of Music where he studied under Sir Charles Stanford (composition) and Messrs. Dannreuther and Algernon Ashton (pianoforte). His career, both as a composer and pianist, was very brilliant during the four years of his studentship, and he soon made a name beyond the walls of his Alma Mater, of which he had been appointed a professor of harmony and counterpoint. Although he was only thirty years of age at the time of his premature and lamented death, Mr. Hurlstone had composed a Pianoforte concerto in D; a Fairy suite ('The Magic Mirror'); Orchestral variations on a Hungarian air (performed at one of the Hallé concerts under Dr. Richter, at Manchester); and 'Fantasie variations on a Swedish air' played at the first Patron's Fund concert in 1904. His chamber music compositions include a Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments; a Pianoforte quartet (played at a Patron's Fund concert in December, 1904); a String quartet; a Sonata for pianoforte and violin; a Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello; a Sonata for bassoon; a Suite for clarinet and pianoforte; in addition to songs, part-songs, &c. To the foregoing must be added his Phantasie (string quartet) which gained the first prize (£50) recently given by the Musicians' Company, to which reference is made on page 489 of the present issue. On the evening of his death, Hurlstone's 'Litany' was sung by the Magpie Madrigal Society, a pathetic incident in connection with the passing away of a man who, in the full flush of his early manhood, had achieved great things in music and in whom greater promise was never to receive its expected and eagerly anticipated fulfilment.

A pathetic interest invests the announcement, which we much regret to make, of the death of Mr. STEPHEN SAMUEL STRATTON, which took place at Birmingham after a very short illness on June 25. For many years Mr. Stratton has most conscientiously discharged the duties of 'Our own correspondent' at Birmingham of THE MUSICAL TIMES, and his last letter to this journal appears on page 491 of the present issue.

Born in London on December 19, 1840, Mr. Stratton began his musical career as a chorister of St. Mary's Church, Ealing. He studied harmony and composition under Charles Lucas, and became assistant-organist of St. Michael's Church, Paddington. In 1863 he obtained the organistship of St. Mary the Virgin, Soho, and from 1864 to 1866 he was professor of music at Totteridge Park School and organist of St. James's Church, Friern Barnet. On his removal to Birmingham in 1866 he held successively the office of organist at St. Barnabas Church (1866-7), Edgbaston Old Parish Church (1867-75), St. James's, Harborne (1876-7), and Church of the Saviour (1878-82).

In 1879 he started a series of chamber concerts at Birmingham, the chief feature of which was the production of works by native composers. But his greatest influence on contemporary music, especially in the Midlands, was in connection with his work as musical critic of the Birmingham Daily Post, an appointment he held from the year 1877 until the day of his death.

His name will be handed down to posterity as the joint author (with Mr. James D. Brown) of 'British Musical Biography' (1897), which, despite its inevitable errors, is a valuable book of reference. He also wrote a 'Life' of Mendelssohn for Dent's 'The Master Musicians' series (1901); and he was the author of a book entitled 'Musical Curiosities.' In private life Mr. Stratton was a genial and companionable man, full of anecdote and overflowing with reminiscences.

DR. PERCY BUCK ON 'PROLEGOMENA TO MUSICAL CRITICISM.'

At the meeting of the Musical Association held at Messrs. Broadwood's Rooms on June 19, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland in the chair, Dr. Percy Buck read a paper on the above subject.

After apologising for offering an elementary paper to a learned Society, the lecturer explained that the recognized authorities on musical aesthetics, through a too learned treatment of the subject, failed to reach the very people whose opinions were most in need of reform. In trying to influence the judgment of young students, whose minds were still in a formative stage, he had never been able to find literature which dealt with aesthetics from the very beginning; consequently he hoped, by stating the methods he had himself followed, possibly to help those teachers who had a similar task and certainly to gain some help from their criticisms.

Dr. Buck first dealt with the general confusion of thought exhibited in discussions on abstract subjects, and the special objections frequently urged against the value of such discussions. Sometimes the objector denies the possibility of a standard in beauty; sometimes he admits standard, but claims that, nevertheless, one man's standard is as good as another's; and not infrequently it is urged that knowledge deprives one of enjoyment. Dealing with these the claim was made that all Art lived by criticism and discussion, and that only in this way could 'atmosphere' be produced. Aesthetics aimed, not at reaching a goal, but at erecting sign-posts; and the natural 'scaffolding of criticism' possessed by everyone could only become self-conscious and sure by the readjustment and co-ordination which discussion brought about.

Three preliminary questions were then asked: (1) What is the 'end' of art? (2) To what in our nature does art appeal? (3) How does it make that appeal? The third question was taken in detail, as embodying all the purely elementary side of criticism. Music was treated in detail as containing (1) grammar, (2) matter, (3) presentation, and as exhibiting qualities (a) sensuous, (b) intellectual and (c) emotional. With regard to the blending of such qualities these postulates required the use of (1) balance, (2) contrast and (3) reticence. After demanding that, besides these postulates, there were three axioms demanding music (i.) to be a projection of personality, (ii.) to be suitable for its particular purpose and (iii.) to embody Zeitgeist, the lecturer concluded by maintaining that a scientific analysis of music was not degrading to the mystery that lies behind all Art.

LINCOLN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Lincoln Festival follows precedent in being a triennial event, but an interval of four years has elapsed since the last festival, and the sixth, which should have taken place in 1905, was postponed on account of the epidemic which then prevailed in the city. Its success was not, however, materially affected by the delay, and the meeting, which took place on June 20 and 21, may safely be pronounced the most successful of the series. To begin with, the programme was of unusual interest, it avoided the hackneyed, but did not despise acknowledged masterpieces; it afforded examples of the most recent developments of the art and also paid attention to the old masters. An excellent orchestra of eighty-six of the best London players was got together, and having secured such a formidable machine, the wise policy—adopted for the first time at the last festival—was followed of providing the players with something worthy of their powers in an orchestral concert that took place in the Corn Exchange on the evening preceding the festival proper.

The presence of two of our most distinguished native musicians, Sir Hubert Parry and Dr. Cowen, gave lustre to the occasion. The former conducted his 'Overture to an Unwritten Tragedy,' first heard at the Worcester Festival of 1893, and since then revised. Why it should have been so little heard since then it is not easy to understand, save on the ground of the disinclination of the British public to believe that an artist can do anything outside what is regarded as his special métier. From Tadmor we must have marble, from Parry we expect only choral music, but in this instance at least such an attitude will lead to the neglect of a work of singular power, full of tragic intensity, and with its emotion unfettered by any mannerisms. Dr. Cowen conducted his 'Phantasy of life and love,' and this, too, may be reckoned among his best compositions, strongly dramatic, well contrasted, and brilliantly orchestrated. The more familiar things in the programme were grouped round Beethoven's eighth Symphony, of which an excellent performance was given under the direction of Dr. G. J. Bennett, who as conductor of the festival and its artistic head, has now raised it to a high state of efficiency and artistic distinction.

On the second day there were two performances in the cathedral. For them a large chorus of 478 voices had been got together, divided into 156 sopranos, 125 contraltos, 93 tenors, and 104 basses. The nucleus consisted of 188 voices from the Lincoln Cathedral choir and Lincoln Musical Society, and nearly as many (175) came from Nottingham. These had been trained by Dr. Bennett, and smaller contingents hailed from Grimsby (trained by Mr. S. W. Smethurst), Hull (trained by Dr. G. H. Smith and Mr. Doorly), Spilsby (Mrs. Massingberd), and Gainsborough (Mr. Montgomery). The thorough training and consequent efficiency of this heterogeneous body were such that, although it was found impossible to arrange for a single full rehearsal, and chorus and orchestra came together for the first time at the actual performance, there was no hitch, and scarcely any hesitancy, a slight want of steadiness in one or two of the choruses in 'Israel in Egypt' being the most noteworthy lapse from perfection. On the other hand the tone was beautiful and well-balanced, no part standing out from the ensemble, the style was vocal and expressive, and some of the more tender passages—as, for example, the last pages of the Brahms Requiem—were really finely rendered.

A brief survey of the programme will show that the task thus accomplished was no light one. A thoroughly festive note was struck at the outset by Dvorák's 'Te Deum,' a work which, to use Beethoven's favourite expression, must have been evolved in a distinctly 'unbuttoned' mood. If contrast were desired it was certainly attained in Sir Hubert Parry's 'Voces clamantium,' which is austere in character, tremendously earnest and dignified. The afternoon programme ended with Brahms's 'German Requiem,' which was preceded by the 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss. The excellent singing of the chorus in the Requiem deserves especial mention, as does Dr. Bennett's impressive reading of the music.

In the evening we had two notable classics as a set-off to the exclusively modern programme of the afternoon. Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, which sounded perfectly delightful in the cathedral, was followed by Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' which remains one of the greatest of the monuments of choral music. If not the finest effort of the chorus, it was well sung, and one was well able to realize the majesty of the double choruses.

The soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Ada Crossley, Messrs. Charles Saunders, Frederic Austin and Dalton Baker. The organists were Mr. H. L. Balfour and Dr. W. G. Alcock, and the entire festival reflected credit on the musicianship and organizing energy of Dr. George J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

DR. GRAY'S NEW CANTATA: ELGAR'S 'THE APOSTLES,' ETC.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

A special interest was attached to the concert of the Cambridge University Musical Society in the Town Hall on June 8 by the first performance of a new cantata, 'Odysseus in Phæacia,' by Dr. Alan Gray, conductor of the Society. Dr. Gray is one of the few composers by whom self-restraint is still regarded as a virtue. He does not think it necessary to keep his name before the public by pouring out an unending stream of unequal work, but is content to write when the spirit moves him and to express his own ideas in his own manner, indifferent to the changing fashions of the day. His stern determination to avoid sensationalism and cheap pseudo-dramatic effects might lead superficial critics to regard his music as old-fashioned and lacking in vitality; but the enthusiasm with which his new work was performed and received in Cambridge was sufficient proof of its solid artistic worth. Part of the enthusiasm was no doubt intended as the sincere expression of that deep personal regard which all members of the Cambridge chorus feel for their conductor; but it may be noted that the Cambridge University Musical Society chorus and its audiences are as a rule critical and fastidious almost to an exaggerated degree.

The libretto of 'Odysseus in Phæacia,' the title of which sufficiently indicates its content, is the work of the Rev. J. H. F. Peile, who has treated the lyric portions with considerable felicity of expression; the connecting passages however have a conspicuously Scriptural ring which must have taxed the composer's skill to the utmost in avoiding a clumsy oratorio style. It is in the choral portions that Dr. Gray has been most successful; here he has shown a thorough command of varied resource, and has depicted with equal vividness the savage guardians of the state religion and the airy grace of Nausicaa's maidens. The most effective number is the central chorus, 'Alcinous built him a house,' which has afforded opportunity for much picturesque instrumentation, and the well-developed finale forms a worthy pendant to it.

The solo parts were entrusted to Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Adelaide Lambe, Mr. William Green and Mr. Foxton Ferguson, who all did full justice both to their own reputations and to Dr. Gray's music. The orchestra worked with a will to secure a sympathetic interpretation of the instrumental portions, and distinguished themselves in the attractively scored 'Dance of Phæacians' and in the sombrely dramatic introduction. The chorus, which at last year's performance of 'Everyman' showed a great improvement on previous years, out-did themselves on this occasion, and seemed determined to develop to the utmost the noble traditions of their ancient Society.

A very successful and impressive performance of Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' was given on June 14 by Dr. Mann's Festival Choir in King's College Chapel. The solo parts were taken by Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. J. Reed, Mr. J. Farrington, Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. A special contingent from the Norwich Festival Chorus represented the 'Mystic chorus.' The London Symphony Orchestra undertook the accompaniments, and Dr. Alan Gray was at the organ. Considering the difficulty of obtaining sufficient full rehearsal the work was admirably given, and the chorus was especially deserving of praise. The excessive reverberation in King's College Chapel is a serious drawback to most musical performances, but it may perhaps have enhanced rather than damaged the effect of Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio.

The Joachim Quartet visited Cambridge on May 9, and a more than usually large audience listened to their performance of Schumann's Quartet in F, Beethoven's in B flat (Op. 130) and Haydn's cheerful Quartet in G.—On May 17 a pleasant concert was given in the Hall of Trinity College by invitation of the Cambridge University Musical Society, at which the Society's amateur orchestra, under the direction of Mr. F. C. S. Carey, gave a very satisfactory performance of Mozart's 'Kleine Nachtmusik,' Elgar's Serenade for strings in E minor and Bach's Concerto for two pianofortes in C minor. The solo parts were played by Dr. Gray and Mr. C. B. Rootham.

The annual College concerts were given in the 'May week.' That at King's was notable for the performance of two part-songs with pianoforte accompaniment by Mr. F. C. S. Carey. These compositions—to words by W. E. Henley—which were sung not long ago at a concert of the Royal College of Music, are full of beauty and real poetic feeling, and we hope they are but the first-fruits of what is to come.

ROYAL OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

Three interesting events demand special notice; the revival of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' on June 4; the first performance in England of M. Massenet's 'Miracle in Three Acts,' entitled 'Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame,' on June 15, and the restoration of ballet d'action on June 21. Seven years have come and gone since Wagner's 'Dutchman' was performed at Covent Garden during the grand season, therefore the recent representation was very welcome.

New scenery painted by Mr. Harry Brooke, and a new ship which moved about as easily as a motor car, were provided, and special attention was paid to the realization of the supernatural effects in the third act. Herr van Rooy gave such a vivid embodiment of the Dutchman that it may be said to be one of his finest impersonations; and Fräulein Destinn was no less intense as the romantic-minded Senta. Herr Knüpfer as Daland also sang very finely, and the cast was completed by Fräulein Grimm as Mary, and Herren Burgstaller and Nietan, who severally personated Erik and the Steersman. Dr. Richter conducted, and in its entirety the performance was certainly the finest ever seen in London.

'LE JONGLEUR DE NOTRE-DAME.'

M. Massenet's 'Miracle' was first produced at Monte Carlo on February 18, 1902, and was mounted for the first time in Paris at the Opéra-Comique on May 20, 1904. The libretto, by M. Maurice Léna, is founded on a legend of the Church of Rome, and is remarkable for there being no female character. The time is the 14th century, and the action takes place without and within the Monastery of Cluny. In the first act is seen the villagers' celebrations of the 1st of May, and the arrival of Jean, a poor juggler. He tries to amuse the crowd by some tricks, but without success, and at length, to gain a few pence, is induced to sing a popular sacreligious song called 'L'Alleluia du vin.' As he is doing so the Prior arrives and denounces him, and draws so vivid a picture of his ultimate future that he enters the monastery to gain forgiveness. The second act shows the preparations in the monastery for the Feast of the Assumption. All the monks are doing something for the Virgin, but Jean can do nothing, and at length in despair he appeals to Boniface, the cook, who tells him that the Virgin will be pleased with anything he can offer. Acting on this advice, Jean enters the chapel in the night and proceeds to give a performance of his tricks and dances before the altar to the Virgin. The Prior, having entered, is about to anathematise him, when the figure of the Virgin becomes suffused with a soft light. Angels' voices are heard. The figure extends its arms in an attitude of blessing, and Jean, in an ecstasy of joy, falls dead.

The composer has made liberal use of plain-song inflections, the ancient modes and folk-tunes, but he has scarcely been successful in blending the old style with the new, and smallness of conception and superficiality of detail are more in evidence than impressive spirituality. The score, however, contains much dainty music. The people's songs and dances in the first act are very bright, the 'Alleluia' with its mock Credo is cleverly written, and genuine feeling rings in Jean's renunciation of liberty in his song before he enters the monastery. In the second act there is engendered a sense of dulness until Boniface sings the 'Legend of humility,' in which is related how Jesus escaped the slaughter of the Innocents by being concealed in a humble sage bush. This is set to a naive air most delicately accompanied, especially by the wood-wind. In the last scene dramatic contrast is obtained by the juxtaposition of Jean's delivery of an ancient song 'Chanson de guerre' and his dancing amidst sacred surroundings, but the composer fails to realize the impressiveness of the conclusion. The part of Jean was excellently embodied by M. Laffitte, the Prior was well served by M. Seveilhac, M. Gilbert gave a remarkably clever sketch of the jovial Boniface, and the four Monks, who severally sing about poetry, painting, music, and sculpture were well sustained by MM. Dognies, Artus and Crabbé, and Mr. Frank Arthur. M. André Messager conducted, and secured an excellent ensemble.

The revival in the grand season of the ballet as a separate entertainment doubtless carried the mind of many veteran opera-goers to their early days, when the prima ballerina assoluta was as popular an artist as the vocal prima donna. The ballet d'action must not be confounded with the ballets at the Alhambra and Empire theatres, in which the art of pantomime and dancing has been made secondary to the spectacular element. The ballet d'action largely partakes of a play without words, and the art of significant gesture is as important as lightness of foot. The Syndicate's revival of the traditional ballet is therefore to be commended, and was indeed necessary for the forthcoming presentation of Gluck's 'Armide.'

'LES DEUX PIGEONS.'

The terpsichorean experiment was made on June 21, when 'Les deux Pigeons' by M. André Messager was performed for the first time in London. This work, originally produced in 1886 at the Grand Opéra, Paris, follows the traditional form. It is founded on La Fontaine's fable, and tells a pretty story of how Pepio is lured away from his fiancée, Gourouli, by the fascinations of a gipsy girl; and how Gourouli, who is a lady of resource and enterprise, goes to the gipsy encampment and, feigning to be one of the tribe, wins back the allegiance of her lover. The music is melodious, graceful, often happily significant of the situation, always refined, and charmingly scored.

For the interpretation of the work the Syndicate engaged Mlles. Aida Boni, Irma Legrand and Lucie Raulin, and M. F. Ambrosini and others, and the corps de ballet from the Brussels Opera House. Mlle. Boni is a captivating exponent of her art, her facial expression and her gestures being as charmingly significant as her dancing. She was admirably supported by her associates, and the composer, who conducted, was warmly applauded by a manifestly well-pleased audience.

The most important of the new artists who have appeared since our last notice is Fräulein von Mildenburg, who made her début at Covent Garden as Isolde on June 6, and on June 11 impersonated Elisabeth in 'Tannhäuser,' on both occasions proving herself an artist of exceptional histrionic ability and vocal means. Madame Giachetti returned to Covent Garden on June 9, when she repeated her fine impersonation of Tosca in Puccini's opera of that name. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang as Carmen for the first time in the Grand Opera season on May 31, when M. Lafitte made his début as Don José. Madame Agnes Nicholls appeared as Venus in 'Tannhäuser' on May 28, and gave a remarkably chaste reading of the part. Herr Burgstaller sang for the first time at our opera house as Erik in 'The Flying Dutchman,' on June 4, and two days later appeared as Tristan. Signor Battistini joined the company on June 13 in the name-part of 'Rigoletto.' The other operas mounted have been 'Faust,' 'Roméo et Juliette' and 'Madama Butterfly,' Mlle. Destinni repeating her pathetic embodiment of the hapless heroine of the last-named.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The two concerts on May 31 and June 14 were not the least interesting of those given during the past season, the ninety-fourth year of the Society's existence. At the former a novelty was presented in a Pianoforte concerto in D composed by Mr. York Bowen. A model of conciseness—its three short movements follow each other without a break—the new work was received with manifest favour, the felicity of its themes and the effectiveness of its orchestration combining to give the concerto distinction and to give encouragement to the young composer, who played the interesting solo part in a most brilliant manner. A quasi-novelty was Mr. Gustav von Holst's vocal scena 'The mystic trumpeter,' a setting of Walt Whitman's words. It was originally produced at the Patron's Fund Concert of May 20, 1904, but the composer has revised the score, making important changes. Even now the work suffers from having been over-orchestrated, but there can be no question as to its cleverness. Miss Gleeson-White sang the scena with true artistic earnestness. Miss Marie Hall played Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, in which she gave an ideally poetic rendering of the lovely slow movement. The remainder of the programme consisted of César Franck's 'Morceau symphonique' ('Redemption') and Schumann's Symphony in C.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor opened the concert of June 14—the last of the series—with his new orchestral work 'Symphonic variations on a negro air,' the said air being well known in America as 'I'm troubled in mind.' Very few, if any, listeners could have been troubled in mind during the performance of this original and happily conceived composition. It is true that the composer had a characteristic tune for his foundation stone, but his superstructure rose to the occasion—if the simile may be allowed; moreover the masterly and picturesque orchestration of this clever and effective composition calls for high praise. At the close of the performance Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who conducted the performance, was warmly recalled.

The other novelty, modestly designated 'Ballad,' was Mr. Holbrooke's setting of Edgar Allan Poe's lyric 'Annabel Lee' for baritone solo and orchestra. In seeking to get the right orchestral colour for his canvas, Mr. Holbrooke discards flutes, trumpets and trombones; but by way of compensation he employs oboes, cor Anglais, clarinets, bass clarinet, bassoon, contra-bassoon, horns, harp, sixteen first and second violins, six violas, six violoncellos and three double-basses. With these resources the composer had no difficulty in providing the sombre accompaniment which the words demand. Mr. Kennerley Rumford did full justice to a work which considerably adds to its composer's reputation; both he and Mr. Holbrooke, who conducted, were several times called to the platform in response to the applause of a large and enthusiastic audience. M. Raoul Pugno again charmed everybody by his delicate and musical touch in interpreting the solo part of Rachmaninoff's C minor Pianoforte concerto and in Mozart's Rondo in A (charmingly played) and Chopin's Second Scherzo (Op. 31). Tchaikovsky's E minor symphony formed the second part of the programme and the concert terminated with the National Anthem. Throughout the season the orchestra has maintained its high standard of efficiency, and Dr. Cowen has conducted with his usual ability.

THE MAGPIE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

This valuable Society has now completed the twenty-first year of its existence, and during the whole of that period it has been conducted by Mr. Lionel Benson. Its speciality is the practice of the finest unaccompanied music, ancient and modern. The Society has attracted to its fold many of the most enthusiastic amateurs of social distinction. The programme of the concert given at the Royal College of Music on May 30 was of great interest, more especially to lovers of the music of Brahms, for it contained no fewer than six pieces by that composer, viz.:

VOLKSLIED (4 parts) ..	"In stiller Nacht,"
PART-SONG (4 parts) ..	"Es geht ein Wehen" (from Op. 62).
MOTET (6 parts) "Warum ist das Licht gegeben dem Mühseligen" ..	(Op. 74).
FEST UND GEDENKSPRÜCHE {	"Unsere Väter hoffen auf dich" ..
(8 parts)	"Wenn ein starker Gewappneter" ..
	"Wo ist ein so herrlich Volk" ..
	(Op. 109).

Eleven other part-songs and madrigals were performed; all the music had been conscientiously prepared. The tone of the choir is good, although it lacks deep resonance, and the tenors are rather weak in the balance. Sometimes the attack was remarkably good. Brahms's 'Warum' proved to be a too severe test of the capacity of the choir to maintain pitch, but all the same it was a very interesting performance. It is certainly a piece that would severely try the powers of the best choirs in the country. It is too long for a competition piece, otherwise it might be recommended 'up north' to enterprising choirs desirous to interpret the finest music.

'A Litany' for female voices (four parts), composed by W. Y. Hurlstone, was very effective, and was encored. It was a weird and sad coincidence that this promising young composer died on that very day! Mrs. George Swinton and Mr. Henry Boulderson contributed some songs, and Mr. H. R. Bird was at the pianoforte.

Mr. Dan Godfrey sends a list of works performed, under his direction, by the Municipal Orchestra, Bournemouth, a document which gives further testimony to the enterprise and artistic standard associated with these sea-side music-makings. Of the total number (238) of works performed during the winter season, forty-one were by British composers, and of these twenty-four were new works.

THE FORTY-SECOND TONKÜNSTLER-
FESTIVAL OF THE GENERAL GERMAN MUSIC
SOCIETY, AT ESSEN. MAY 24-28.

The Annual German Carnival of Cacophony—for that it is more and more tending to become, besides bringing forward just a few works which may be heard of again—served at any rate to show how splendidly the art-life in the pre-eminently industrial town of the Big-Gun Queen has developed during the last decade. A superb modern concert hall in the shady town park, of which any town might be proud, an excellent municipal orchestra under a thoroughly capable conductor, Prof. Witte, competent choirs, and, last but not least, an art-loving, enthusiastic and hospitable population who do not allow the smoke from Miss Krupp's hundred chimneys to interfere with their musical appetite and digestion, whatever may be the effect on their lungs—these are the factors which, given some enjoyable music, warrant the best hopes for a successful festival. In the present case the hopes were not falsified, for an animated 'Fest-Stimmung' prevailed throughout the week. From this point of view, and taking into consideration the crowded audiences before whom an appalling avalanche of the newest and most modern music crashed down into the abyss of time and space, the meeting was a distinct success. But whether the greater part, or even a small fraction of the novelties proved really enjoyable to any but the most advanced of the young 'Heaven-stormers' amongst musicians, critics and amateurs may be doubted.

As the programme of the festival has already been published in THE MUSICAL TIMES, there is no need to mention, much less discuss, the whole of the fifteen new works. At the first concert, on May 24, a Symphony in E major by Hermann Bischoff, 'Sea-drift,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra by Fritz Delius, and a fantasia 'Life: a dream' (after Calderon's play) for violin solo and orchestra, by Otto Neitzel, proved the most important works. Bischoff, who is a pupil of Richard Strauss, handles the orchestra with something of his master's bravura. His first movement is a fresh, buoyant piece of music, built upon taking themes, and developed with much spirit and effect. Its bright promise is not however fulfilled by the remaining portions of this long symphony (it lasts an hour!). Long before the composer comes to a close his verbosity exhausts his listener's patience, so that the final impression is one of weariness which even an acquaintance with his 'programme' (for the symphony has a programme) does not dispel. Mr. Delius's 'Sea-drift' was generally acknowledged to be, with one exception, the most important work of the festival. It is a striking piece of musical impressionism, marvellously coloured, and, in spite of many extravagancies, harmonically fascinating. There is no thematic material to speak of; chords and modulations, sound-experiments and mood-picturing alone produce such an astonishing effect, and express the composer's poetic idea in such a convincing manner, that the listener feels persuaded almost against his inclination that he has heard a masterpiece of a very individual and novel kind. The difficult work was beautifully sung by the Essener Musikverein; the orchestra and the soloist, Herr Loritz, were equal to every demand that was made upon their intelligence. Strange to say, Herr Neitzel's fantasia shows unmistakable French influence. It is well written for the solo instrument, beautifully scored, and shows throughout the hand of a master of his craft who knows how to display his esprit as effectively in his compositions as he does in his critiques in the Cologne Gazette and in the Leipzig Signale, or in his lectures. Herr A. Kosman, the excellent leader of the Essen String Quartet, played the solo part superbly.

At the second orchestral concert on May 27 the chief novelty of the festival, Gustav Mahler's sixth Symphony in A minor, was produced. Realizing that a gigantic work, lasting over ninety minutes, would make quite exceptional demands upon the receptiveness of his audience, Herr Mahler had stipulated that his symphony should form a programme entirely by itself. 'Either this, or no performance!' quoth he. Events proved the soundness of his policy, for whereas some of the other concerts lasted five hours and produced utter exhaustion long before the end was reached, the audience came fresh to Herr Mahler's symphony, and the impressions it produced were not obliterated by several succeeding hours of other composers' music. It says much for his position in the musical world in Germany that he could make such a condition and that it was agreed to. But then a Mahler première is as great an event in Germany or Austria as, say, the production of Sir Edward Elgar's hypothetical Symphony in E will be in England—when it does eventually get completed and is produced by Dr. Richter. Mahler's new work managed to get itself talked about long before the festival, for it was known to break the record as regards the quantity of percussion instruments employed; and nothing fascinates the average amateur more than to see the orchestral podium crowded with out-of-the-way specimens of what he calls 'kitchen furniture.' In addition to his usual large array of drums, cymbals, &c., Herr Mahler employs a glockenspiel, a set of deep bells, some cow-bells—already requisitioned by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his 'Manfred' pastorale,—xylophon, several celestas, tambourine and tamtam, a wooden clapper, a birch broom to 'tickle' the drums, and a hammer to be struck on a Brobdingnagian square drum. The last-named toy was, however, eventually dispensed with at the performance. That the whole of the wood-wind, horns and trumpets are doubled goes without saying.

Mahler's success was complete. Again and again he had to return to the platform to receive the congratulations and thanks of the crowded audience. Even those to whom his music remained a sealed book were carried away by his superb conducting of a marvellously finished performance. That the symphony has come to stay it would be rash to prophesy. Several things are in his favour: the diatonic nature of his long-drawn main themes, his rare sense of rhythm, and his splendid scoring, which generally allows the polyphonic web to stand out with exceptional clearness. His subject-matter is not always of a high order, but it enables him to build imposing structures. Indeed, as a musical architect he has few rivals. The first movement is a striking specimen of Mahler at his best. Virile and imposing, it carries the listener away with it on a powerful, broad symphonic stream. The Andante moderato, though its chief subject does not begin very promisingly, is deeply felt, at times tinged with a touch of melancholy, and worked up to some impressive climaxes. A middle section in the style of a pastorale introduces the cow-bells, thus suggesting a programme in spite of the composer's emphatic declaration that he does not write programme music. The Scherzo, which stands as the second movement in the printed score and only exchanged places with the Andante at the rehearsals, is in some respects the best movement. It is a clever and amusing 'Grotesque,' in which some listeners imagined they heard the grunting of pigs, the cackling of hens and the croaking of frogs. A mid-section, in 7-8 time and marked Altväterlich (old-fashioned), is especially charming. In the enormously extended Finale (118 pages of full score!) the music becomes so complicated that even Mahler's masterful orchestration cannot prevent it from degenerating into absolute cacophony. It were a bold man who ventured a definite expression of opinion on such a complex and lengthy movement by a composer of Mahler's genius. Enough that it gave rise to much headshaking, though its tremendous physical force, so to speak, carried the audience with it and brought the happy composer an ovation.

Of the remaining works it is needless to speak in detail. A great deal of hideous sound-experiments, protracted beyond endurance in many cases, were inflicted upon the long-suffering audiences. That they failed to relish them was proved by the veritable frenzy of delight with which they greeted a beautifully made, comparatively simple, melodious, clear and eminently sane String quartet in D (Op. 41) by Hugo Kaun. Here was real music, and the people hailed it as they would a heaven-sent message. Herr Kaun's was the one undisputed popular success of the festival. It surprised some of the 'superior' ultra-moderns. But when musicians choose to write thus simply, naturally and beautifully, they find audiences ready to listen to them. And so it will always be.

Musical Competition Festivals.

HEXHAM (TYNEDALE).

(April 27 and 28.)

The first day was devoted to the children's choirs. Avingham school, Broomhaugh, Ryton Thorpe and Haltwhistle were among the prize-winners. The choirs combined under Mr. Tertius Noble, the adjudicator, to sing the cantata 'Vogelweid.' On the second day there were some good entries in the adult choral classes. The secretaries of the festival are Mrs. T. H. Ridley and Mrs. Arthur Gibson.

NORTH-WEST NORFOLK VILLAGE CHOIR ASSOCIATION, LYNN.

(May 9.)

This Association has grown out of Mr. W. H. Leslie's propaganda. It may be hoped that the work will be carried on without the personal factor being indispensable. The festival on this occasion brought forward some excellent choirs. In the first or preliminary section for small village choirs Thornton (Mr. T. Webster) was successful, and in the second section Heacham (Mr. A. H. Cross) was first. In the chief section the Hunstanton festival choir (Mr. E. E. Watson) gained the first place. The test-pieces were 'Take heed, ye shepherd swains' (Pearsall), 'Judge me, O God' (Mendelssohn), and 'And the glory' (Handel). In the female-voice section Hunstanton St. Edmunds (Mr. B. Roden Hilder) was successful. The total number of choirs that competed throughout the day was ten. Dr. Coward adjudicated. The secretary of the Association is Mr. Ernest E. Watson, of Hunstanton. Mr. W. H. Leslie retains his connection with the festival in the very useful capacity of treasurer. Their Majesties the King and Queen are amongst the numerous patrons of the Association.

FEIS CEOIL, DUBLIN.

(May 14 to 19.)

There were competitions in all branches of music, including choral, solo and ensemble singing, and solo pianoforte, violin and violoncello playing, organ playing, &c. The judges were Miss Agnes Zimmermann (pianoforte), Mr. Franklin Clive (singing), Mr. Arthur Payne (strings) and Mr. Ivor Atkins (choral singing). The entries in the choral competitions were much in advance of previous years, over forty choirs coming forward in the different divisions. The following choirs were the chief prize-winners:

The Maiden City Choir, Derry (Dr. D. C. Jones).
Varian's Choral Society, Dublin (Robert O'Dwyer).
Dublin Glee Singers (Mr. Joseph Seymour, Mus. Bac.).
Louth Ladies' Choir (Mr. Raymond Revelle).
Amphion Choir, Dublin (Dr. G. B. White).
Dublin Glee Singers (Mr. Joseph Seymour, Mus. Bac.).
Leinster School of Music (Mr. S. S. Myerscough).
Kenmare College (Madame J. Quinton-Rosse).
Lurgan Philharmonic Choir (Mr. A. J. J. Beatty).
Brian Boru Gaelic League Choir (Mr. William McGouran).
Phibsboro Glee Singers (Mr. Peter Walsh).

The net of this important festival is cast very wide, as the syllabus enumerates fifty-seven classes and many of these are subdivided. The concert given by the prize-winners on the last day proved to be interesting and drew a good audience notwithstanding the bad weather.

ESKDALE TOURNAMENT OF SONG, WHITBY.

(May 15 and 16.)

This year's festival, which was the fourth held in this district, showed that the movement maintains its hold on the musical amateur. Solo-singing was a feature, and there were some excellent choral performances. There were also violin and pianoforte classes. Mr. T. Tertius Noble adjudicated. The Misses Yeoman, of Woodlands Sleights, are the secretaries.

BERKS, BUCKS, AND OXON (READING).

(May 17, 18, and 19.)

This is a movable festival. It is held in turn in various towns in the three counties. The choral classes are especially well supported, and the school classes are also well filled. In the village school section Dr. Somervell adjudicated, and reasserted his view that part-singing was bad for the voices, and even for the characters of children. On the first day, besides the school and junior choirs, there were numerous small mixed-voice choirs, a boys' solo class (19 competitors), and instrumental classes (in which Mr. Percy Sharman adjudicated). In the evening the adult choirs combined, under Dr. H. P. Allen, to perform Haydn's 'Spring,' the Oxford orchestra assisting. Mr. W. D. Boseley played Handel's Organ concerto in G, and Mr. Francis Harford and Miss Frederica Daniell sang.

On the second and third days solo singing, pianoforte playing, accompanying at sight, singing at sight, vocal trios and quartets, organ playing, and schools and choirs from larger towns were tested. The adjudicators were Mr. H. Blower, Dr. Ernest Walker, Mr. H. Bird, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Mr. Percy Sharman, Dr. H. P. Allen, Dr. Varley Roberts, and Dr. Sweeting, a rare galaxy of talent. The Rev. B. C. S. Everett's Windsor choir, the Banbury Madrigal and Glee Union (Mr. Sherwin Marshall), George Street, Oxford, Congregational Church (Mr. H. E. W. Phillips), the Parish Church choir (men and boys), Banbury (Mr. W. Luttman), the 'Charles Child' male-voice choir, the Reading University College choir (Mr. J. C. Tirbutt) were prize winners in their respective classes.

At the final evening concert the 600 singers united under Sir Walter Parratt to perform Wesley's 'Exultate Deo' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens.' Both works were performed with great success, the latter work being encored. The festival is obviously exerting considerable influence in giving directness to practice and in educating taste. The secretaries are Mrs. Commeline and Miss S. A. Blunt.

BURY (LANCASHIRE).

(May 25 and 26.)

This is a new festival, and if its future may be gauged by the success of the first venture, it will probably develop into one of the important events of its kind. The chief promoter of the scheme has been the Rev. E. A. Glenday, who has succeeded in gathering a committee of ladies and gentlemen who are convinced of the utility of the festival. Instrumental performances as well as numerous classes for vocal music were catered for in the syllabus. Solo-singing proved to be very popular, and there were almost overwhelming entries. Only one school—the Grammar School for girls—sent in classes. Green Mount Congregational Church Choir (Mr. Joshua Knowles), New Road Congregational Choir (Mr. George Webb), Salford Select Choir (Mr. F. W. Blacow) were among the prize-winners. Fifteen choirs competed. At the last session, on the second evening, there was a large audience to hear the final competitions. Dr. McNaught and Mr. C. H. Fogg adjudicated.

HULL.

(May 30 and 31.)

This is a new festival promoted in the first instance by the Rev. T. F. Jones, of Burstwick Vicarage. In view of the novelty of the scheme to the inhabitants of the district, the fact that about one thousand competitors entered in the various classes must be accounted a remarkable success.

Hornsea sent in some capital entries in the school section and that for mixed-voice choirs. The Brigg, Burstwick, Scunthorpe Apollo and Barton choirs were also successful in their special classes. There were ninety-seven entries in the solo-singing classes, and three for the pianoforte trio class, in which the test was Gade's Trio in F (Op. 42). The adjudicators were Minor Canon Dams, of Carlisle, and Mr. Bernard Johnson.

SHREWSBURY.

The competitions held on Whit-Monday in connection with the Shrewsbury Fête were a success. The winners of the £50 prize for the best rendering of the choruses 'Ye nations, offer to the Lord' (Mendelssohn) and 'O gladsome light' (Sullivan) were the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. J. W. Armitage). In the male-voice piece 'The Spartan heroes' (Protheroe) five choirs competed. The Warrington male-voice choir, under Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, gained the first place. The prize of £10 for juvenile choirs was won by the Higher Grade School choir, Shrewsbury (Mr. T. Guerin Robin). Four bands competed in one section and the prize was awarded to the Wingates Temperance Band. In the contest for Shropshire bands seven competed, Jackfield band being first. The adjudicators were (vocal) Dr. Roland Rogers, Bangor; (bands) Mr. J. W. Beswick, Manchester.

WITHAM (EAST ESSEX).

(June 9.)

The first competitive festival here was held with unexpected success. It was not that there was a large number of entries, as one full day sufficed for both the competitions and the concert. It was the widespread interest taken in the event and the very careful preparation made by the various competitors that constituted its success. Only adult vocal classes were catered for on this occasion. Terling, under Lady Rayleigh, and Birch, under the Rev. E. P. Luard, gained distinction in the church choir class. The sight-singing was very creditable. In the chief class six choirs competed. The Excelsior singing club from Chelmsford, under Mrs. T. H. Waller, sang admirably and gained the first position.

In the small parish choir section, Birch (Rev. E. P. Luard) was first. At an evening concert the choirs combined, under Dr. McNaught the adjudicator, to sing several choruses. Mrs. F. C. Bramwell (Miss Hilda Foster), Miss Katherine Jones, and Mr. Gervase Elwes sang and Miss Susan Lushington played violin solos.

The festival was organized mainly by Mr. F. C. Bramwell.

LYTHAM (LANCASHIRE).

(June 14, 15, and 16.)

It is a remarkable testimony to the enthusiasm of amateur musicians in the north-west corner of England that the numerous festivals held there all gain steady support. Lytham, although only a few miles from Blackpool, was able this year at its sixth festival to attract a surprising number of excellent soloists and choirs, and to eclipse its previous record in the number of competitors. There were 60 adult solo singers, 31 pianoforte and violin players, 24 junior solo singers, 9 school choirs, 11 vocal quartets, 17 men's-voice choirs, and 10 mixed-voice choirs. The children's day was a great attraction. It brought forward what was declared to be some of the most perfect school choir singing that had been heard at these and similar gatherings. The Revue (Blackpool) Council School, under Mr. J. R. Rigby, especially distinguished itself by the perfection of its unaccompanied three-part singing. An interesting feature was the performance, by the combined choirs, under the direction of Mr. H. Whittaker, of Blackpool, of 'A garland, a song for children,' in which a number of national and folk-songs are arranged for connected performance. Action-songs receive unusual attention in this district, and on this occasion 'Caller Herrin,' treated in this fashion by the young girls of the Eldon Street (Preston) School, under Miss Irvin, gave the audience a thrill they are not likely to forget.

The Reedyford choir (Mr. R. R. Widdop) was first in the mixed-voice choir section, and the Lyric male choir (Mr. Joseph Smith) from Preston first in the small male-voice choir section. Artistically, the most important performances were those of the choirs in the chief male-voice choir section. The test-pieces were 'Feasting I watch' (Elgar), 'From the sea' (MacDowell), and 'The old soldier's dream' (Cornelius). All three pieces call for the finest possible singing, and as on this occasion they were interpreted by two of the best equipped male-voice choirs in the country, the competition was intensely interesting. The Cornelius piece, which is a splendid example of the peculiar genius of its composer, created a profound impression. The Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) gained the first place and Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke) came close behind. Four choirs competed. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught and Mr. C. H. Fogg. The official accompanists were Mr. A. Vivian Jackson and Mr. T. S. Warburton, both of Blackpool.

ST. CECILIA CLUBS, LONDON.

(June 19 and 20.)

This is a Union of working girls' clubs for the purpose of a choral competition. This year's event took place at the Passmore Edwards Settlement in Tavistock Street. Ten intermediate choirs competed on the first night, the first place falling to Peel Institute (Mr. V. Merry). The tests were 'Sweet and low,' two-part song by Luard-Selby, and

'The song of the gale,' two-part song by Myles B. Foster, and, besides, each choir sang a unison sight-test. On the second evening four advanced clubs competed and the singing was very creditable to teachers and pupils. The tests were the trio 'From the green heart of the waters' (Coleridge-Taylor) and a trio arrangement of 'Blow, blow, thou wintry wind' (Stevens). In addition sight-singing in two and three-parts was imposed. The result showed that considerable pains had been spent on the study of expressive singing, and especially of sight-singing. St. Mary, under Mr. Harvey Grace, excelled in nearly every point and gained the challenge picture offered as a prize. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. Mrs. H. G. Lousada is the secretary.

The festivals at Spilsby (Lincolnshire), April 23, Northampton, April 28 to May 5, and Petersfield (Hants), April 24, 25, 26, were all held with success.

London Concerts.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The chief feature of the students' concert at Queen's Hall on June 1 was the production of two compositions by Mr. Hubert Bath, Goring Thomas Scholar. They are termed 'Two sonnet reflections,' and their novelty consists in the composer requiring the poems—Rossetti's 'Death in love' and 'A sea-spell'—to be recited before the music is played. This method has two advantages—the reciter is not rendered inaudible, which too commonly occurs in accompanied recitations, and the listener's mind is prepared for the composer's ideas. Mr. Bath has written for string octet, pianoforte and organ, and he has done so with a skill and melodic inventiveness which promise further achievements. It should be added that the sonnets were expressively declaimed by Miss Vera Cockburn. Another student work was an 'Introduction and allegro' for octet of strings by Miss Eleanor Rudall. Considerable independence of idea is shown in this, and the fair composer deserves encouragement. Praise is due to Miss Dorothy Grinstead for her rendering of four Pianoforte studies (Op. 19), by Poldini, whose opera 'The vagabond and the princess' was recently produced at Covent Garden. Much promise was also shown in violoncello solos by Miss Gwendolen Griffiths, and songs were contributed by Mrs. A. L. Shergold, Miss Kathleen Nigel Jones, Miss Alice Baxter and Mr. James McNaughton Duncan.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Encores are rightly prohibited at the students' concerts of the Royal College of Music, but the inevitable exception occurred on June 13, when the audience clamoured for and was granted a repetition of a part-song for ladies' voices entitled 'Litany,' by the late Mr. William V. Hurlstone, a pathetic testimony to the genius of this exceptionally promising young composer. The evening opened with a symphony in C by Haydn and closed with Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata 'Kubla Khan,' a melodious and clever setting of Samuel Taylor Coleridge's 'Vision in a dream,' performed for the first time in London at Queen's Hall by the Handel Society on May 23 last. Mr. James Friskin gave an admirable rendering of the solo part of Brahms's Pianoforte concerto in B flat, and songs by Mr. Ernest B. Farrar, artistically sung by Mr. Robert Chignell, completed the programme. Sir Walter Parratt and Sir Charles V. Stanford conducted.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The orchestral concert given on June 20 at the City of London School by the pupils of the Guildhall School of Music reflected much credit upon all concerned. Two pianists appeared, Miss Alice M. Nielsen and Mr. Arthur L'Estrange, who were severally heard in Mozart's Concerto in D minor (No. 20) and in Weber's 'Concertstück,' and supported by the student orchestra conducted by Dr. W. H. Cummings. Miss Nielsen showed much musical feeling in the slow movement, and Mr. L'Estrange played with neatness, assurance and considerable repose; the vocalists were Miss Elizabeth Tarttelin and Miss Alice Stroud, both of whom showed promise. The programme concluded with Mendelssohn's overture, 'Calm sea and prosperous voyage.'

PRIZE PHANTASIES.

At Bechstein Hall on June 22 were performed the six String quartet phantasies which gained the prizes recently given by the Worshipful Company of Musicians at the instigation of that enthusiastic amateur violinist, Mr. W. W. Cobbett. The chief prize (£50) was awarded to the composition of Mr. William Y. Hurlstone, whose lamented and premature death is recorded in another column. Those who listened to this charming work had no difficulty in endorsing the verdict of the adjudicators—Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Messrs. W. W. Cobbett, Alfred Gibson and Hermann Sternberg. Rich in its subject-matter, Hurlstone's Phantasy is a composition of distinct merit in its musicianly and pleasure-giving qualities. Its three movements are deftly connected by a metamorphosis of two themes, and as the entire work is commendably concise it is a welcome example of linked sweetness not long drawn out. The remaining prize phantasies are by Messrs. Frank Bridge, James Friskin, Joseph C. Holbrooke, H. Waldo Warner, and Haydn Wood. Of these the compositions of Mr. Holbrooke and Mr. Friskin stand out above the rest: the former by virtue of its attractive Adagio and the latter in the quality of its humour—a sense that is not greatly possessed by most young English composers, judging from the lugubrious products of their pens. The phantasies were played by the Saunders Quartet, and pleasant relief was provided in a charming song, 'The blind boy,' by Mr. Hurlstone—one of his last compositions—most feelingly sung by Mr. Charles Mott and accompanied by Mr. Henry R. Bird.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The first of two concerts given by the London Symphony Orchestra with Herr Nikisch conducting took place at Queen's Hall on June 9 and attracted a large audience. No novelty was presented, but record is due of Herr Nikisch's vivid interpretation of the overture to Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman,' and of the intense realization of the introspective character of Brahms's Symphony in C minor. His reading of Strauss's symphonic poem 'Death and transfiguration' was not distinctive. The work came at the end of the programme, and before its commencement there was a considerable exodus from the hall. Had enough been heard, or was it that the admirers of Brahms and Wagner are not in sympathy with the music of Strauss?

TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION.

The annual festival held at the Crystal Palace on May 26 fully maintained its popular character. Two concerts were given on the Handel orchestra—the first by 5,000 juvenile singers, under the direction of Mr. S. Filmer Rook, and the second by 2,000 adult vocalists, conducted by Mr. L. C. Venables. Attractive programmes had been prepared for both music-makings, in the execution of which all who took part are to be congratulated. The novelty of the adult concert was a Festival Te Deum composed by Ciro Pinsuti and performed in England for the first time on this occasion. Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe and Mr. H. W. Weston were efficient organists, and Mr. Allen Gill adjudicated at the choral competition.

SOUTH HAMSTEAD ORCHESTRA.

The reputation already acquired by this orchestra, conducted by Mrs. Julian Marshall, was fully sustained at the twentieth annual concert of the Society which took place on June 12 at Queen's Hall. The chief feature of an over-long programme was Beethoven's Violin concerto, the solo part of which was beautifully played by Herr Fritz Kreisler. Praiseworthy performances were given of Brahms's Symphony in E minor (No. 4), and the ballet music from Mozart's 'Idomeneo.' The dramatic singing by Señor Luis Alvarez was greatly appreciated.

MR. WILLIAM HENLEY'S QUARTET PARTY.

Some time ago the exceptional talent of Mr. William Henley as a violinist was commented upon in these columns, and his formation of a string quartet party is to be hailed with satisfaction. His associates are Miss Gertrude Crompton (second violin), Mr. James Lockyer (viola), and Miss Gertrude Ess (violincello), whose concerted playing testified to individual ability and careful rehearsal. As will be surmised, Mr. Henley makes an admirable quartet leader; one who inspires as well as controls, and the three concerts given at Steinway Hall on June 8, 15 and 22 may be said to have established the party in the esteem of musicians. The first selection of quartets consisted of Svendsen's in A minor (Op. 1), Tchaikovsky's in F (Op. 22), and Mendelssohn's in E flat (Op. 12); and a like judicious variety distinguished the programmes of the other evenings.

MISS ELENA GERHARDT'S VOCAL RECITAL.

There are some vocalists who have a good voice but one that is ill-trained, and others who can boast of good training but whose voice is of moderate quality; but it is rare to meet with a singer endowed with natural gifts who has thoroughly matured them by steady study. Miss Elena Gerhardt has done all this, which of course implies intelligence; and in addition she enters thoroughly into the spirit of the music she interprets—in brief, she is an artist for whom a great future seems in store. How difficult it is sometimes to account for the unsatisfactory rendering of music, whether vocal or instrumental, but on the other hand when a performance is really good it makes direct, immediate appeal. Miss Gerhardt sang everything well at her recital at Bechstein Hall on June 13, but the most striking numbers of her programme were: 'O liebliche Wangen' by Brahms; Jensen's delicate 'Am Ufer des Flusses'; and Hugo Wolf's 'Und willst du deinen Liebsten.' A good singer depends to a large extent for her success on her accompanist. On this occasion Mr. Arthur Nikisch was at the pianoforte, and by his able and sympathetic playing he intensified the charm and power of the singing.

Mischa Elman, the wonderful boy violinist, whose readings are so matured that he would seem to have very little to learn, played at the Queen's Hall on May 29 and June 11. On the latter occasion, supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, he was heard for the first time here in Brahms's Concerto in D, interpreting the solo part with astonishing depth of expression and technical mastery. The conductor was Herr Nikisch, who secured delightfully romantic renderings of the overture to Weber's 'Oberon' and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite.

Miss Tilly Koenen, who gave the first of two song recitals on June 1 at Bechstein Hall, is gifted with a fine mezzo-soprano voice and dramatic perception that will always secure her a welcome in English concert rooms. She showed great versatility and was specially successful in her rendering of Schubert's 'Die Allmacht,' which was given with most impressive sincerity, breadth, and dignity. Miss Koenen's second recital on June 22 was equally successful.

Miss Edna Hoff, who hails from New York, held her first recital in London at Aeolian Hall on June 6. She has a flexible and fresh-toned soprano voice, her programme attested to good taste, and her interpretations were distinguished by refined intelligence. Miss Hoff was assisted by Mr. Herman Sandby the Danish violoncellist. Mr. Hamilton Harty played the accompaniments most sympathetically.

Amongst the many pianoforte recitals recently given, that by Mr. Harold Bauer on June 6 at Bechstein Hall lingers in the memory by reason of the intellectual and emotional significance of his readings. His selection contained Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111); Schumann's 'Carnaval' and Handel's Suite in G; the inclusion of the last-named piece calls for special commendation—it is music well worthy of revival.

Mr. Albert Cazabon, a young violinist, made a very favourable impression at his recital at Steinway Hall on June 8. He produced a good tone from his instrument, and played with firmness, taste and brilliancy. Assisted by Miss Margaret Bennett, an admirable reading was given of Beethoven's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in F (Op. 24). Miss Dorothy Crompton contributed some vocal solos.

Miss Grainger Kerr's vocal recital at Æolian Hall on June 7 merits record if only by reason of the novelties in her programme. 'The song of the Genie' and 'Evening song' by Granville Bantock are good examples of his genius, the former broad and impassioned, the latter tender and poetical. A word of praise is also due to Mr. Norman O'Neill for his rondel 'In Guernsey,' and to Mr. Roger Quilter for 'Airly Beacon' and 'A secret.' Pleasing variety was contributed by pianoforte and violin solos, respectively played by M. Jean and Mlle. Marie du Chastain.

The Scandinavian vocalist, Froken Rodolfa Lhombino, assisted by Herr Heinrich Fiedler, gave a recital of vocal and violin music on June 11 at Bechstein Hall. The lady has a clear soprano voice, easily produced and flexible, and it was judiciously used in a number of songs and with special success in several Norwegian lyrics. Herr Fiedler's violin playing was much appreciated.

Miss Jessie Grimson's orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on June 11 presented several interesting features. Herself a violinist of great ability, her skill was shown prominently in Max Bruch's G minor Concerto. In this she was assisted by the 'New Symphony Orchestra,' a recently formed body consisting of some fifty instrumentalists conducted by Mr. Edward Mason, under whose direction commendable interpretations were given of Goetz's too much neglected Symphony in F, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Orchestral ballad in A minor.

Miss Winifred Christie's third pianoforte recital on June 11 at Æolian Hall showed that the young artist is not only making good progress, but was distinguished by the first performance in London of Liapounov's 'Carillon' from the 'Etudes d'exécution transcendante' (Op. 11), a piece that may be compared to an epitome of the conclusion of Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture.

M. Hardy-Thé is a tenor vocalist trained in the best schools of French singing. His style, perhaps, would be more appreciated in the drawing-room than in the concert-room, but he manifestly gave pleasure to his audience at Bechstein Hall on June 12.

A most enjoyable evening was given by Madame Jeanne Raunay and Mr. Harold Bauer on June 12 at Bechstein Hall. Madame Raunay gave a remarkably fine reading of the heroine's great scena in Gluck's 'Iphigénie en Tauride,' and was equally successful in César Franck's 'Le Mariage des roses' and Berlioz's 'L'Absence.' The accompaniments were beautifully played by Mr. Bauer, whose pianoforte solos included Schumann's 'Faschingsschwank aus Wien' and Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor.

Miss Ellen Wigley gave a successful concert at Steinway Hall on June 12, at which Madame Frickenhaus and other artists assisted.

The Henriette Schmidt String Quartet—consisting of Mmes. Henriette Schmidt, Marie Rodriguez, Jeanne Levine and Hélène Dolmetsch—gave a very attractive concert on June 13 at Æolian Hall. Excellent renderings were given of Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), and Borodine's Quartet in A minor, No. 1. A special feature of the afternoon's music was the performance—said to be for the first time in England—of Vivaldi's concerto for three violins, a work which consists of a vivacious Allegro, a brief but most expressive Andante, and a vigorous and rhythmical Finale, the pianoforte accompaniment being played by Mr. Charlton Keith.

The latest pupil of Prof. Sevcik, styling himself 'Floris,' made his first appearance in England on June 13 at Queen's Hall. He is understood to be a younger brother of the Bohemian violinist Franz Ondricek, and he would not seem to be as yet out of his teens. The youth showed great executive command over his instrument, and his readings were refined, but it cannot be said that he displayed any marked individuality. His selection included F. W. Rust's Sonata in D minor, Bach's 'Chaconne,' and the first performance of a Violin concerto in A minor by Tor Aulin. The orchestral parts of the last-named, however, not arriving in time, the work was played with pianoforte accompaniment, consequently criticism is best postponed. The Queen's Hall Orchestra (conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood) opened the concert with a performance of Richard Strauss's 'Don Juan.'

The first vocal recital given by Mr. John Coates at Bechstein Hall on June 14 proved such an artistic success that it is to be hoped he will give similar demonstrations of his skill as an interpreter. Mr. Coates's dramatic perception and artistic insight have long been recognized, but his versatility has never been seen in so favourable a light. He not only presented a programme remarkable for variety and contrast, but he keenly realized in his singing the subtle requirements of each composer, being no less successful in Bach's 'Hebt euer Haupt empor' than in old French ditties and modern English songs by Elgar, Parry and Granville Bantock.

Warm encouragement is due to Miss Isoline Harvey, a young violinist who, after studying at the Royal College of Music, has been with Prof. Sevcik. Although Miss Harvey has need of more study, she plays with genuine musical feeling and is very pleasant to listen to. Songs from her pen, severally entitled 'Sing to love' and a setting of Longfellow's 'Suspria' furnish proof that Miss Harvey also has creative talent. These songs were expressively rendered, respectively by Mr. Merlin Davies and Miss Olga Marsden, and pianoforte solos were contributed by Miss Una Bourne. Miss Harvey's recital took place at Bechstein Hall on June 14.

Miss Ethel Leginska increased the number of her admirers by her vivacious and clever pianoforte playing at her orchestral concert, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood at Queen's Hall on June 14. She is to be commended for having revived Henselt's Concerto in G minor, which is well worthy of being heard occasionally; in this and in Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor the young artist played with great brilliancy and intelligence.

On the occasion of Mlle. Marie Dubois and M. Jan Hambourg's pianoforte and violin recital (Æolian Hall, June 15) brilliant and significant interpretations were secured of Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A (Op. 12, No. 2) and Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole.' In the latter work Mr. Hambourg was associated with Miss Daisie Buckrout, whose rendering of the pianoforte arrangement of Lalo's instrumentation merits great praise. Mlle. Dubois's chief solo was Schubert's Fantasia (Op. 15), which she admirably interpreted.

Those remarkably clever young ladies, Misses Ruth, Phyllis and Margery Eyre, are not only the bearers of a name well known in musical circles, but have the distinction of forming an estimable instrumental as well as a charming vocal trio. At their enjoyable evening concert on June 19 at Æolian Hall, the chief instrumental work was Schumann's Pianoforte trio (No. 2) in F (Op. 80), of which an excellent interpretation was secured; and the vocal trios selected included 'The nightingale' (Thomas Weelkes), 'O sweet pleasure' and 'Returning from the village' (Jean de la Borde), and 'Brautlied' (Robert Kahn). The young artists also contributed solos on their respective instruments—pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—much to the manifest enjoyment of an appreciative audience.

Dr. Ludwig Willner sang most impressively at his recital on June 20 at Bechstein Hall. Every song was given with a truth and intensity of expression that imparted to each a vivid personality, and the recital was a splendid lesson to vocalists. Miss Johanne Stockmarr contributed some pianoforte solos with power and artistic insight.

The Belgrave Choral Society gave an interesting concert on June 15, the programme including Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' as its principal features. The solo parts in the 'Pied Piper' were sung by Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Noel Farrow. The accompaniments were played by Mr. van Lennep's symphony orchestra, which was also heard to advantage in the overture to 'William Tell.' Mr. Martin van Lennep conducted.

Among the overwhelming number of concerts and recitals recently given in London, record is due of the following:

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's chamber concert at Messrs. Broadwood's on May 25. Herr Kreisler's violin recital, Queen's Hall, May 26. Miss May Mukle and Mr. Harford's violoncello and vocal recital, May 28, at Bechstein Hall. Mr. Francis MacMillan's violin recital, Queen's Hall, May 28. Miss Gertrude Peppercorn's pianoforte recital, Æolian Hall, June 8. Miss Irene Ainsley's vocal recital, Bechstein Hall, June 10. Mr. Boris Hambourg's violoncello recitals, Æolian Hall, May 26 and June 9 and 23. Mlle. Clotilde Kleeberg's pianoforte recitals, Æolian Hall, June 13 and 20. M. de Greef's pianoforte recitals, Æolian Hall, June 11 and 14. Miss Elsie Southgate's violin recital, Æolian Hall, June 16. Fräulein Rosa Olitzka's vocal recital, Bechstein Hall, June 18. Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and Herr Zur-Muehlen's pianoforte and vocal recital, Bechstein Hall, June 18. Signor Busoni's pianoforte recital, Bechstein Hall, June 19.

The concerts of the Philharmonic Society and the Magpie Madrigal Society are noticed on page 485.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A testimonial concert of quite an exceptional character was given to Mr. F. W. Beard in the Town Hall on May 26. As conductor of the City Choral Society, Mr. Beard had done excellent work for seven seasons past, without fee or reward other than the artistic results achieved. The Society organized the concert, and assistance was generously given by composers and artists whose works had been given and interpreted at the Society's concerts. The living composers represented were Elgar, Stanford, Cowen and Granville Bantock; the conductors were Sir Charles Stanford, Mr. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Bantock and Mr. Beard himself, while the soloists included Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. John Coates, Dalton Baker and Plunket Greene. In addition were the full chorus and band of the Society. The programme comprised Stanford's 'Songs of the sea,' selections from Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' two lyrics, Bantock's 'Ferishta's fancies' (Browning), and a miscellaneous selection. The function was a great success, the hall being crowded.

The promenade concerts at the Theatre Royal terminated on June 2 with a plébiscite programme which included Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, 'Casse Noisette' suite, and '1812' overture; Beethoven's 'Leonore' overture No. 3; Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' overture and 'Ride of the Valkyries'; and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march in D. There was an enormous attendance, and Mr. Landon Ronald and Mr. Max Mossel were greeted with hurrahs of applause.

The musical matinées at the Rooms of the Royal Society of Artists were brought to a close on June 9, when Mr. Oscar Pollack directed his two hundred and ninetieth concert. There was a capital attendance and much applause.

The concerts marking the close of the session at the Midland Institute School of Music began on June 14 with chamber music. The modern trend of the School was shown in the pieces selected—Glazounov, Ernest Chausson, César Franck and Christian Sinding being the principal composers represented.

The choral and orchestral concert was held in the Town Hall on June 20. The one choral work was César Franck's 150th Psalm, and the chief orchestral pieces were the same composer's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra (Miss Olive Rider, pianist), and Glinka's overture 'Russian and Ludmila,' all performed for the first time in Birmingham. Mr. Arthur Hitch was the soloist in the Rondo Capriccioso for violin and orchestra by Saint-Saëns, Miss Marie Stuart and Miss Elsie Cornish contributed songs, and Mr. F. Mullings gave a song from Byron's 'Childe Harold's Pilgrimage,' the composition of Julius A. Harrison, a student. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted. Two performances of Gluck's opera 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' for the first time in England, took place too late for present notice. The Town Hall concert and the opera performances are public functions, a bold proceeding on the part of the directors, but one justified by the great interest taken in the work of the Midland Institute School of Music.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the present term took place on May 2 in the Town Hall under the auspices of the Musical Club, when the Joachim Quartet gave an excellent chamber concert. The programme consisted of Beethoven's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), Haydn's in D (Op. 76, No. 5) and Brahms's Quintet for Clarinet and Strings in B minor (Op. 115), a work composed for Prof. Mühlfeld, who played the clarinet part.

Only the most important of the College concerts given during the 'Eights Week' can be noticed. Balliol led off on May 20 with a chamber concert given by the Wessely Quartet, at which Schubert's Quartet in C minor was performed. Exeter followed on May 22 with a concert which included Sir Hubert Parry's 'Lady Radnor's suite' for strings and Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings (Op. 38). The excellent rendering of several part-songs reflected great credit upon the training of Mr. C. E. Winn, the organ-scholar, who conducted. On the following evening Keble gave a capital concert. The programme, chiefly orchestral, included Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, Brahms's Orchestral Serenade, the Scherzo from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet' and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite, these pieces being interspersed with songs and part-songs. Mr. F. Shaw, the organ-scholar, conducted this exceedingly pleasant evening's music-making. On May 25 Queen's gave its concert, the most important item being a new short cantata 'Legend of the North,' for male voices, composed for the occasion by Mr. Percy Godfrey, who conducted. The programme also included a chorus, 'The Festival,' by Sir Frederick Bridge, who honoured the Society by occupying the conductor's desk.

Dr. Edvard Grieg had the honorary degree of Doctor of Music conferred upon him in the Sheldonian Theatre on May 29, when an enthusiastic attendance welcomed the popular Scandinavian composer, the semicircle and galleries being nearly filled with fair admirers of his genius. Dr. Grieg seemed much delighted and gratified, and when leaving the Sheldonian was greeted again and again with rounds of applause.

On June 6, in the same building, Sir Hubert Parry delivered his lecture on 'The function of thematic material' before an appreciative audience. The illustrations were admirably rendered by Miss Lightfoot (vocalist) and Mr. Friskin (pianist).

On June 16 New College gave an excellent concert. The principal items were Sir H. Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' conducted by its genial composer, and Brahms's Pianoforte concerto in B flat, the solo part being played by Mr. Donald F. Tovey.

We must not omit to mention that on some of the Tuesday afternoons of this term Bach organ recitals have been given at New College, and that at Balliol the Sunday evening concerts have been continued as usual under the able direction of Dr. Walker.

Sir Walter Parratt has been elected an Honorary Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, of which formerly he was organist.

Foreign Notes.

AMSTERDAM.

A new symphonic poem by Alphonse Diepenbrock, entitled 'The great silence' and suggested by a sentence of Friedrich Nietzsche, 'Here is the sea; here can we forget the town,' was recently produced, and immediately (i.e., at the same concert!) repeated.

ANTWERP.

'Le Tasse' (Tasso), a new opera in four acts and eight tableaux by M. Eugène d'Harcourt, was recently produced at the Théâtre Royal with great success. It is a melodious work of the grand opera type of which Meyerbeer has supplied the best examples. Some of M. d'Harcourt's airs, duos, &c., roused the audience to genuine enthusiasm.

BASLE.

After lengthy discussion and much argument pro and con, it has been decided to rebuild the municipal theatre on the old site on the Steinenberg, at the corner of the Theatre Street. The new building is to cost 2,300,000 francs and will of course excel its predecessor in every way.

The International Musical Society will hold its second Congress in Basle on September 25, 26 and 27 next. Its proceedings are scheduled under eleven heads, upon one of which, 'Questions of musical organization,' Dr. Charles Maclean, of London, will speak.

BERLIN.

Felix Weingartner has just now a good opportunity of pondering on the wisdom of the German saying that 'it is not advisable to sell the bearskin until you have caught the bear.' After all the fuss of affectionate leave-takings from his devoted Berliners, farewell concerts, regretful adieus, in the Berlin Press eulogistic reviews of his career as conductor, and paragraphs in every musical paper in the civilized world, the unexpected has happened! The Berlin Generalintendantur der Königlichen Schauspiele has sternly set its face—as behoves an institution with such a formidable title—against granting the unhappy Felix the desired permission to retire.——The last of the season's concerts deserving notice were a 'Bach' organ recital by Herr Carl Straube, and visits from two foreign male-voice choirs. The former took place on May 15 in the Garrison Church and impressed certain Berlin critics sufficiently to warrant their speaking of Herr Straube's doings in terms like 'an epoch-making event.' Their justification for such language seems to lie not so much in the organist's remarkable virtuosity, but in his strongly 'subjective' interpretation of Bach's music. This caused him to perform a piece like the great 'Fuga concertato' in D with a brilliancy bordering on the 'impossible,' and others in a quiet, subdued manner, which are generally given in a 'brilliant' style by the average organist. That Herr Straube's subjectivity is the outcome of a deep-thinking artist's nature, and not of caprice and a wish at all hazards to be different from other performers, cannot be doubted. In how far his interpretations can be considered legitimate it is impossible in the absence of any 'tradition' to decide, nor can the effect of his view on other organists, German or foreign, be gauged at present. That they will be fiercely combated seems but natural.——The concert of the Basle male-voice choir, on May 23, under Kapellmeister Hermann Suter served to introduce another first-rate body of singers. Its 160 members are splendidly drilled, and technically as well as intellectually their performances were above criticism. Their perfection in keeping pitch especially excited admiration. The programme included Schubert's 23rd Psalm, the conductor's 'In der Fremde' (which had to be repeated), 'Walpurga' by Hegar, 'Held Samson,' by Reinecke, R. Strauss's 'Lied der Freundschaft,' Hans Huber's 'Verblüht,' and choruses by Andree, Billeter, C. Munzinger, &c. That Swiss composers were specially favoured in selecting the programme was only natural, but that their pieces proved of very considerable worth came as an agreeable surprise. The other foreign Society was the small but most excellent male-voice choir of about fifty members, the Suomen Laulu, from Helsingfors, under the direction of Mr. H. Klemetti, who has so drilled his enthusiastic Fins that they gave Berliners a most favourable opinion of the state of musical culture in the politically much-tryed Grand Duchy by the Baltic Sea. The Suomen Laulu excels in roundness and fulness and marvellous gradations of tone, perfect enunciation and a breathing technique suggesting a consummately trained solo-singer. A very unconventional programme added to the charm of those Finnish and finished vocalists, who, by-the-way, sang everything by heart. The part-songs by native composers such as Genetz, Järnefelt, Krohn, Palmgren, Törnudd (all unknown names to us!) were racy of the soil on which they were conceived, and in melody, harmony, and rhythm offered delightful surprises. A piece of wild, almost demoniac fascination and remarkable power of expression entitled 'Die Zauberrune' (The magic rune), by Törnudd, and a delicious cradle-song by Palmgren, were especially appreciated.

COLOGNE.

Some years ago, while staying in the metropolis of the Rhinelands, King Oscar II. of Sweden heard the famous Cologne male-voice choir. The singing must have left a most favourable impression on His Majesty's mind, for when he passed through the town recently he expressed a desire to renew the pleasure of his former visit. The choir, numbering 210 voices and conducted by Prof. Schwartz, thereupon foregathered in the music-room of the Hotel du Nord, and, with the King alone forming the audience, sang a selection of pieces including F. Hegar's famous Ballade 'Totenvolk' ('The phantom host,' which deals with an episode in the history of Sweden), Schumann's 'Ritornello,' a Swedish folk-song 'Spin, spin,' arranged by Hugo Jüngst, and Breu's 'Frühling am Rhein.' His Majesty expressed his delight in and his thanks for the 'extraordinarily beautiful singing,' and freely chatted with the members of the committee about the Society's history and affairs generally.——Signor Mascagni was enthusiastically greeted at the first performance here of his new opera 'Amica,' which he conducted. That he was also engaged to conduct the work which made him famous and on which his fame solely rests, viz., 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' goes without saying; and that the 'gemüthliche' Rheinlanders loved it as much as ever seems but natural, since it is the same the world over. 'Amica' was warmly received, but it is doubted whether it will fare any better than the many other post-Cavalleria attempts of the hero of the one and only Intermezzo.

DUSSELDORF.

On July 29, the fiftieth anniversary of Schumann's death, a memorial tablet will be affixed to the house, corner of Alleestrasse and Grabenstrasse, in which the great master lived from 1850 to 1853, while he was municipal Music-Director.

ELBERFELD.

In the presence of the composer the Lehrergesangsverein (teachers' chorus) under Dr. Hans Haym gave a very successful Friedrich Hegar concert, at which a number of the Swiss master's fine choral ballads were excellently performed. Hegar himself conducted his latest work 'The heart of Douglas' for soli, chorus of men's voices and orchestra.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.

Old Johann Schenck's once famous opera 'Der Dorfbarbier' (The village barber) has been very successfully revived by the operatic class of the Raff Conservatorium. The work was first performed in Vienna in 1796, when Schenck (1753-1836) was in his forty-fourth year. To-day he is chiefly remembered because he gave Beethoven some lessons in counterpoint, and in a fit of enthusiasm kissed Mozart's hand during the overture at the first performance of 'Die Zauberflöte.' Who could blame him for that kiss?

GÖRLITZ.

The programme of the sixteenth Silesian Musical Festival on June 17-19 included Mozart's 'Requiem' and Schumann's 'Faust' Scene (first day); Bruckner's 'Te Deum,' R. Strauss's 'Domestic Symphony,' Liszt's symphonic poem 'Prometheus,' and his choruses in Herder's 'Prometheus Unbound' and the Finale from Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung' (second day); Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Pianoforte concerto in C minor by Count Hochberg, Georg Schumann's

'Sehnsucht' and the 'Meistersinger' Finale; the orchestra of 110 performers was the Berlin Königlische Kapelle, under Dr. Muck. Of the fifteen soloists few if any seem to be known in England. Miss Edyth Walker, of Vienna, is perhaps the sole exception.

HALLE.

A new Symphony in F minor by Prince Henry XXIV. of Reuss (jüngere Linie) was produced here on May 19 at a concert given by the Singakademie, under Prof. Reubke, and very favourably received, especially as regards the first and third movements.

HEIDELBERG.

A Schumann memorial concert of the Bach Choir under Prof. P. Wolfrum deserves mention, because it was given in what was formerly called the Museums-Saal, and now forms part of the University buildings. The room, though no longer devoted to concerts, was chosen on this occasion to recall the fact that Schumann, when a student at the University, made his first and only public appearance as a pianist on this identical spot.

HELSINGFORS.

An unusually deep impression was made at a recent chamber concert in the Music Institute, by a new Pianoforte quintet by a young Finnish composer, Erik Furnhjelm, a pupil of the recently deceased Martin Wegelius. Invention and knowledge are equally remarkable in their freshness and strength, and except in the Adagio, where Wagnerian influences can be traced, the style is strangely individual, considering that the quintet is the work of a youth of twenty-two summers. The composer, who was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm, will doubtless be heard of again before long, for he is only the latest among a number of very talented Finnish composers who are commencing to make a stir in the music world.

KLAUSENBURG (TRANSYLVANIA).

A new opera 'Széchi Mária,' by Julius J. Major, of Budapest, was produced here recently.

LEIPZIG.

It is many years since the opera scored a success anything like that which attended the first performance here of R. Strauss's 'Salome,' on May 25. Kapellmeister Hagel conducted this most difficult of all operas with consummate ease.—The fourth subscription concert of the Riedel Society, held in the Old Thomaskirche on May 31, was devoted to several pieces by Scarlatti, Jomelli, Zingarelli and Perez, to show the development of church music, by Neapolitan composers, anterior to Mozart, and to some rarely-heard short works by that master himself. These latter included a Kyrie for five soprani—a masterpiece of canonic writing—an Agnus Dei for soprano solo and orchestra, and the Kyrie and Gloria from the Missa Brevis for chorus and organ. A recitative and air for soprano, an Andantino affetuoso for oboe, string quintet and continuo, both by Hasse, completed a highly interesting and instructive programme, which was excellently performed under the direction of Court Kappellmeister Dr. Göhler.

MANNHEIM.

To celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation the male-voice choir 'Liederkrantz,' gave two festival concerts under the direction of Court-Kappellmeister Hildebrand, at which a new choral work, 'The death of Sardanapalus,' by Lothar Kempster, was produced, and very favourably received.

MAYENCE.

A Handel Festival under the auspices of the Empress Frederick Foundation, and conducted by Prof. Fritz Volbach, took place here on May 17 and 18. 'Judas Maccabæus' and 'Saul' constituted the programme, and were performed in accordance with Prof. Chrysander's editions. In fact the Empress Frederick Foundation has for its object the popularization of Chrysander's attempts at 'reconstructing' Handel's masterpieces. Some strange things, for which even Chrysander cannot be held responsible, were done, e.g., instead of the final chorus in 'Judas' the 'Hallelujah' from 'The Messiah' was sung; and in 'Saul' a movement from a concerto for organ and orchestra was interpolated to suggest David's fight against the Philistines! New horns (in D and G) and trumpets (in D and F), specially constructed by Messrs. Alexander, of Mayence, were used, on which it is said the most difficult even of Bach's passages can be played with ease.

MILAN.

A new opera 'O Eidelberga mia,' under which euphonious title it is not difficult, in spite of the dropped aspirate, to recognize Meyer-Förster's popular play 'Old Heidelberg,' will be produced next season at La Scala Theatre. The composer is Ubaldo Pacchierotti.

MUNICH.

Max Reger—whose first orchestral work, the 'Sinfonietta,' was the most important and most fiercely discussed orchestral novelty of the past season in Germany—has just completed another work of symphonic dimensions, viz., a Serenade (Op. 95) in four movements, in which the strings, with the exception of the double-basses, are divided into two orchestras. These orchestras (or 'choirs') are meant to be grouped to the conductor's right and left, one of them playing con sordino throughout. The wind and percussion instruments are restricted to two each—flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, horns and drums—with one harp. Hof-Kapellmeister Pohlig, of Stuttgart, has secured the first performance of this interesting novelty.

PARIS.

It has been known for some time past that M. Camille Saint-Saëns was engaged upon a new 'grande Ode musicale,' to be performed at the festival in connection with the celebration of the tercentenary of the birth of Pierre Corneille. The eminent French composer, himself an enthusiastic admirer of the great French dramatist, was unanimously chosen for this task by a committee of the foremost French poets and musicians of the day. The poem, by M. Sébastien-Charles Leconte, begins with an apostrophe to Paris, 'ville que la Pensée et l'Art ont faite sainte,' after which a number of characters from Corneille's greatest tragedies sing, to Saint-Saëns's music, certain famous lines appertaining to their rôles. The ode concludes with a peroration in the style of an apotheosis, in which, according to M. Gabriel Fauré in le Figaro, 'the united forces of the two choirs, organ and military band form a brilliant ensemble charged with enthusiasm and heroic strength.' The work was performed more or less 'privately' at the Grand Opéra on June 6.

The Académie des Beaux-Arts at its last meeting awarded the Trémont prize of 1,000 francs for the composition of an opera to M. Gabriel Dupont, author of 'La Cabrera' (the Goatherdess); the Charrier prize of 500 francs for chamber music, to M. Charles Duvernoy; and the Monbinne prize of 3,000 francs for opéra-comique, to M. Ch. M. Widor, for his 'Fishermen of Saint-Jean.' The jury of the Concours Crescent, under the presidency of M. Camille Saint-Saëns, divided the prize of 20,000 francs between M. Eugène Cools, for a Symphony for orchestra alone, and M. Guy Ropartz, for a Symphony with chorus. This is the first time the competition has been devoted to Symphony. Each prize-winner receives, in addition, the sum of 1,500 francs to defray the expenses of copying, while the conductors who produce the prize works will be awarded 4,000 francs for M. Cools's score, and 10,000 francs for M. Ropartz's Choral Symphony, as contributions towards their expenses.

M. Taffanel, first conductor of the Grand Opéra, who has been unwell for some months, has resigned. His successor is M. Paul Vidal, who will have MM. Mangin and Henri Busser under him as second and third conductors respectively.

On May 19 M. Camille Saint-Saëns gave a concert in the Salle Erard to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of his first public appearance. It is difficult to realize that the master who is as busy as ever with his pen, and does not allow a single year to pass without producing some important work, was born so long ago as October 9, 1835. If he may never have to be counted amongst the greatest composers, his melodic charm, perfection of form, the clearness and sanity of his style and the beautiful colour of his music have been enough to give pleasure to countless thousands in concert hall, theatre and drawing-room, while as an executant both on the organ and pianoforte he has enthused audiences in nearly every civilized country. M. Saint-Saëns played, before a brilliant audience, the Andante and Allegro from his first concerto, Beethoven's E flat concerto—a reminiscence of his earliest triumphs as a pianist—and two smaller pieces from his pen, viz., 'Wedding-Cake' and the 'Rhapsodie d'Auvergne.' Madame Auguez de Montalant sang several of the master's songs, MM. Francis Planté and Léon Delafosse played the 'Caprice héroïque' and a Scherzo, both for two pianofortes, and the orchestra of the Conservatoire, under M. Georges Marty, performed the overture to 'Andromache.' Needless to say, the veteran master was received with the utmost enthusiasm, which was all the more genuine because the audience knew that he had generously arranged to hand over the proceeds of the concert to the funds for the alleviation of the distress caused by the appalling disasters of Courrières and the Vesuvius eruption.

ST. PETERSBURG.

To celebrate the opening of the Imperial Duma, Alexandre Glazounoff has composed a hymn for chorus and orchestra on a poem by R. A. Sokolow, entitled 'To the Elect of the Russian people.'

STOCKHOLM.

The first Swedish musical Festival was held here on May 30 and 31 and June 1 under the direction of MM. Tor Aulin, Nordquist and Henneberg. The programme was entirely devoted to Swedish compositions. One wonders how three days' music-making could be devoted to a national art of which virtually nothing is known in England.

The degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon Mr. Hugh Blair and Mr. William H. Speer at Cambridge University on June 14.

The Musical Union, Wellington, N.Z., gave a performance of 'The Messiah' in the Town Hall on Tuesday in Holy Week (April 10), under the direction of Mr. Robert Parker. Special interest was imparted to the occasion by the use, for the first time in conjunction with band and chorus, of the splendid organ recently built by Messrs. Norman & Beard. Mr. F. W. Rowley presided at the instrument and gave most valuable help. On Friday in Passion Week selections from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion were performed in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral. The recitatives were admirably sung by Dr. Kington Fyffe and Mr. C. Clarkson, and two of the soprano solos by Mrs. B. M. Wilson. The chorales and several choruses were well rendered by the choir. Mrs. T. A. Revell lent efficient aid at the pianoforte, and Mr. Robert Parker (organist and choirmaster of the Pro-Cathedral) presided at the organ.

The Southall Choral Society gave a successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' on May 30, the picturesque music receiving ample justice at the hands of the large and well-trained choir. The tenor solo, 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' was sympathetically sung by Mr. Frank Beckett. The solo vocalists in the miscellaneous second part were Miss Maud Hardy and Mr. Edward Halland. Mr. Edward A. Puttee conducted.

The Workshop Musical Society terminated its season on May 30 with a members' concert in the Town Hall. The programme consisted chiefly of the works in which the Society was concerned in the recent North Notts Musical Competitions at Retford, Stanford's 'The battle of the Baltic,' Mackenzie's three-part song 'The distant bells' (in which the ladies of the choir were the prize-winners) and Dr. Brewer's 'A ballad when at sea' by the male voices. Mr. Hamilton White conducted.

At a general meeting of the Portmadoc Choral Society, held on May 22, Mr. J. Charles McLean, conductor of the Society, was presented with a pair of solid silver candlesticks on the occasion of his marriage.

Mr. Edgar L. Bainton has been appointed conductor of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Postal Telegraph Choral Society.

Answers to Correspondents.

D. B.—The instrument—incribed '1617, G. Plumtre'—of which you send us a photograph is an early specimen of the horizontal zither. Two melody strings, tuned in unison, ran over the finger-board where the letters for the notes are marked. The finger-board has lost some of its frets as well as its lettering. Then there were also five accompaniment strings plucked with the fingers of the right hand, whilst the thumb (as in the modern German zither) struck the melody-strings with a small thimble-plectrum. Prætorius (1619), who gives a picture of a similar instrument in his 'Organographia,' calls it the Scheidholt: in his instrument, however, there are only two or three accompaniment strings. An almost identical form is now in use in parts of France, where it is known as the Bûche or Épinette des Vosges. In Norway there is a like rectangular form in use called Hommel. We much question the date 1617 on your instrument. It seems too early for its advanced form and arrangement. Prætorius' Scheidholt is much more elementary. However, only a thorough examination of the curiosity would satisfactorily determine this.

V. O.—Yes, instances can be cited in which the rhythm of a tune has been changed. William Knapp published his long metre tune 'Wareham' in both triple and double forms. Orlando Gibbons's tune 'Angel's Hymn' is a similar example, though he may not have authorized the two versions. The National Anthem has also been subjected to a rhythmical metamorphosis, by Czerny in his 'Queen Victoria's Coronation march' (1838), where the familiar tune—in quadruple rhythm—forms the trio of that now forgotten composition. Such a 'topsy-turvyism,' however, is no justification for any conductor who vigorously beats four in a bar when 'God save the King' is performed.

MUSICUS.—We have answered your Sullivan question on more than one occasion, but we gladly do so again. For biographical material see the 'Dictionary of National Biography'; Arthur Lawrence's 'Life' of the composer; Charles Willeby's 'Masters of English Music'; W. J. Wells's 'Souvenir of Sir Arthur Sullivan' (Newnes); Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'; THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1900, and various numbers in 1901. The foregoing sources of information will furnish you with suitable musical illustrations for your lecture.

BARITONE.—(1) The compass of Joseph Holbrooke's scena 'Marino' is from the low G (bass clef) to the upper F sharp, two octaves less a semitone: it is published by Messrs. Novello at 3s. net. (2) The compass of the same composer's 'Annabel Lee' is from B to G, an octave and a sixth: the ballad is published by Messrs. Boosey at 2s. 6d. net. (3) Brahms's Romances from Tieck's 'Magelone,' edition for a low voice, is published at 8s. net.

A. W. H.—(1) Two volumes—comprising letters A to L—of the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' have been published. (2) For a 'suitable book from which to teach singing to boys of fourteen (individually)' see the School Music Reader Books, No. 154 (for Sol-fa), and No. 137 for staff notation (movable doh), price 6d. each (Novello).

CURATE.—The nationality of the players forming the various Hungarian bands in this country is a matter that is only whispered about. The colour of their uniforms (and of their skins) is no guarantee of the uniformity which should characterize their speech: as a matter of fact, not a few of these 'Hungarians' have acquired a wonderfully good English accent.

ANXIOUS.—If you cannot obtain the services of a good teacher you would find the following books on pianoforte technique by Mr. Franklin Taylor invaluable—'Primer of pianoforte playing' (Macmillan) and 'Technique and expression in pianoforte playing' (Novello).

M. G.—Professor Niecks happily describes 'portamento' as 'the highest perfection of legato.' The term is used chiefly in connection with singing—'a carrying of the voice from one note to another'; it is also applicable to the playing of wind and stringed instruments played with a bow.

C. H. W.—We regret that we cannot trace the chant you send. An inquiry of the organist of the church at which you heard the composition would doubtless obtain the desired information.

A. G. B.—You will find good material for your Grieg lecture in 'Edvard Grieg,' by H. T. Finck, published by John Lane; the bibliography at the end of this interesting book is very useful.

STUDENT.—If you have passed the 'London Matric,' why not work up for a musical degree at London University? We cannot differentiate between the standards of examinations in music at the various Universities.

ALFREDO JOSEPH.—The 'Mad Scene' from Ambrose Thomas's 'Hamlet' is published (with French words) at 4s. 6d. net: the only arrangement for pianoforte solo is that included in the entire work, pianoforte score, 12s. net.

O. K. H.—We do not know where a complete list of forthcoming Eisteddfodau can be obtained, but notification of such events is generally to be found in the School Music Review.

C. A.—Photographs of the great composers can be obtained from the Berlin Photographic Company, 133, New Bond Street, W.

ELEANOR.—Miss Marie Hall may be addressed through her agent, Concert Direction E. L. Robinson, 7, Wigmore Street, W.

DORIS.—'Beethoven's Cookery Book' is unknown to us; perhaps you are thinking of Beeton's exhaustive treatise on the culinary art.

R. S.—Yes, the balanced swell pedal on an organ is quite as effective as the ordinary swell pedal.

H. E. D.—The word 'Israel' should be pronounced in singing as in ordinary speech, not the broad vowel 'ah.'

W. H. W.—It is best to begin 'Thus saith the Lord' ('Messiah') with the final chord of the instrumental introduction, but custom varies in this respect.

PERCY.—The Æolian harp can be obtained from Messrs. Metzler & Co., Ltd., Great Marlborough Street, W.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day. Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

(BIBLE VERSION)

AND

THE CANTICLES

POINTED FOR CHANTING.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

MINUET D'AMOUR, for Small Orchestra, also Violin and Pianoforte.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skillful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively endorsed.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts (5), 7s.Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor has built a set of beautiful and most interesting orchestral variations on the theme of a negro song or hymn, beginning "I'm troubled in mind," which is almost certainly of purely African origin. As at first presented it does not seem very promising, but the composer does wonders with it and yet preserves its essential character throughout. His work is finely expressive, beautifully scored, and original in design.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer of "Hiawatha" gives us on the present occasion a set of Symphonic Variations on a negro tune which is said to be familiar in America under the title "I'm troubled in mind." The melody in question is characteristic in form and rhythm, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor makes play with it in his own picturesque fashion. . . . It has enough of barbaric suggestion, while both in the handling of the theme and the general orchestral current of the piece there is no want of variety. . . . The new Variations were well, even brilliantly, played; and the audience, in accordance with Philharmonic traditions, greeted them with quite a burst of enthusiasm.

STANDARD.

"Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air," by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, is a work based on a bold theme, which is a real negro melody, and developed with clever orchestration. Effective use is made of the brass and woodwind, especially in the section where the theme assumes a march character. The composer, who conducted, obtained a vigorous rendering of his interesting work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's brilliant talent for orchestral writing is well known, but it has never served him better than in this case. His variations show remarkable freshness and originality of design, and they are scored with an astonishing command of the secrets of tone-colour. At times the influence of Dvorák, particularly in his "New World" vein, is to be traced in the work, but there is no suggestion of anything like plagiarism, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is to be congratulated upon having produced a work which deserves to take a definite place in the modern orchestral repertory.

EVENING STANDARD.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Orchestral Variations on an African Theme" has a genuine negro melody for its chief theme, which is developed with much ingenuity and varied orchestral colour characteristic of the composer's style. It is an effective work which ought to become popular.

MORNING POST.

The work heard for the first time last evening is one of the most striking he has as yet written. The title is perhaps a little misleading. Announced in one place as "Orchestral variations on an African theme," it is styled in another "Symphonic variations on a negro air." The word rhapsody would, however, be more suitable to describe the very brilliant orchestral piece the composer has constructed upon a theme which, we are told in the excellent analytical notes by Messrs. F. Gilbert Webb and Edgar F. Jacques, is known in America under the title of "I'm troubled in mind." There is nothing dry or scholastic in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's treatment of this theme, which undergoes many and varied transformations at his hands. The scoring is admirable throughout and the work is instinct with life and vigour. Under the composer's spirited direction the piece received an excellent interpretation and was evidently greatly appreciated.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air" has his characteristic picturesqueness and fervour. There is real pulse in his music. . . . It contains some good melodic material, and works up to an imposing climax.

GLOBE.

His "Orchestral Fantasia on a Negro Melody" is quite in his old vein. The air itself is both quaint and beautiful, and in his treatment of it he has not only employed all the resources of modern art, but he has also succeeded in preserving its character with singular skill, and the Fantasia is as interesting and effective a piece of work as he has given us for some time.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The work is one of haunting beauty, built as it is upon a pathetic negro melody which runs throughout like a golden thread. Certain works by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor which have followed his ever popular "Hiawatha" have not completely commended themselves to our critical judgment; but here his old, fine inspiration seems to have returned to him, and he treats his subject not only in a finely melodic but also in a finely artistic manner. He worked the whole composition up very gradually, but very emotionally, to a fine artistic finish.

THE GUARDIAN.

The theme chosen by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a characteristically melancholy negro melody that does not at the outset appear very promising as the basis of modern variations. But the composer handles it with such spirit and resource, and adorns it with such a wealth of picturesque orchestration that the interest of the work never flags. The most attractive section is that which stands for the slow movement in the symphonic scheme, a passage of rich glowing melody, treated with much polyphonic ingenuity.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS).

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

PRIVATE MUSICAL COLLECTIONS.

II. THE REV. F. W. GALPIN'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Pleasantly situated in a by-way of Essex, close to the Hertfordshire boundary, is the old-world village of Hatfield Broad Oak, the Hatfield Regis of ancient times. A parish church has existed on its present site for a thousand years. Its tower, 75 feet in height, carried a beacon in war time, but its nave is the only part left of the fine Priory Church built about 1380. On the north of and adjoining the sacred edifice stood a Benedictine Priory, founded in 1135 and dissolved in 1534. That the literary aspirations of former parishioners were well cared for is proved by the library attached to the church, which contains a collection of theological, classical, and general literature, formed about 1690 and now also used as a little museum for parochial antiquities. Four hundred years ago music had its place in the services of Hatfield Church, for in the early part of the 16th century the deeds record one Stephen Storey 'organ player,' who had a yearly salary of 40s. (about £24 in present value). At the dissolution of the monastery two organs were thus scheduled in the Inventory, now preserved in the Public Record Office, of the Priory of Hatfield Regis :

The purchaser of the 'payer of Organes,' doubtless for use in the church, was the Rev. Robert Noke, vicar of the parish at the dissolution of the Priory: he also bought—probably for domestic rather than ecclesiastical purposes—the following odds and ends :

Item sold to the said Mr. Noke all the stuffe

To return to the instrumental music of the church, which in all probability was in abeyance for a century and a-half. The vagaries of the parish clerk in the matter of pitch may account for the following entry in the churchwardens' payments :

Evidences of the church band—those west gallery musical enthusiasts immortalized by Washington Irving, George Eliot and Thomas Hardy—are furnished by the following disbursements by the churchwardens :

HATFIELD BROAD OAK PARISH CHURCH.

(Photograph by Rev. F. W. Galpin.)

The church band at that time comprised violin, violoncello, flute, clarinets (2), and serpent: the performer on the last-named instrument was Paterson Parker, grandfather of Mr. W. Frye Parker. In 1859 an organ again found its way into the church, a two-manual instrument containing a pedal stop 'which will wake your people up,' wrote the Rev. John Kempthorne who opened the instrument, to his friend the vicar. The organ has been twice enlarged during the incumbency of the present vicar, and no one can say that the good villagers of Hatfield Broad Oak are not very wide awake musically, as we shall presently see.

It is an easy transition from the church to the vicarage. Once across the threshold of that pleasant habitation the visitor soon comes into contact with the hobby of the vicar, Mr. Galpin, namely, his remarkable collection of old musical instruments. They line the staircase and passages and occupy two well-filled rooms at the top of the house. As the specimens are over 600 in number it is only possible to call attention to some of the chief features of the collection. A start may be made with a horn of baked clay used in the worship of Bacchus, c. 100 B.C. (Illustration on p. 524.) The uppermost head of this tiny antiquity ( $7\frac{1}{2}$  inches high) represents that of a Bacchante; below are the grape vine and the head of Dionysus. Of a very different type is the fine Oliphant hunting-horn made of elephant ivory (Bavarian, 17th century), an elaborately carved instrument containing representations of hunting scenes and the conversion of St. Hubert after Dürer; it probably belonged to a member of the hunting order of St. Hubert. Of English manufacture there is a hunting-horn made by William Bull, of London, in 1699, and a forester's horn of the 18th century. Among the trumpets is the Herald's (straight) trumpet dated 1460, a German instrument made by Sebastian Hainlein. Of special interest is an English slide trumpet made by Woodham, of London, c. 1805. The name of the inventor of the English slide trumpet has hitherto been unknown; but this instrument, recently discovered, contains on the spring box the following inscription:

Woodham Inventor & Maker Exeter Court Strand. London.

This brass section includes a treble trombone in B flat made by Schmied, of Pfaffendorf, in 1781, an instrument supposed to have been the 'tromba da tirarsi' of Bach.

The flute family is a very prolific one with its various branches. Here is the nay, the vertical flute of the Egyptians, while the nose flute of the Savage Islands shows, we are told, the proper way of playing transverse flutes. The latter instruments are blown from one nostril, the other nostril being pressed by the finger, a method of tone production which is not so nasal as might be expected. The voice flute (so-called) has a large hole in the side of the tube covered with a thin skin, which by its vibration gives a somewhat reedy timbre to the tone, hence its name—voice flute: in China these membranes are in general use for the same purpose. An interesting relic of the past is the flute (German) with one key, made by F. Boie about 1720, which formerly belonged to the celebrated flute player, Johann Joachim Quantz, music-master to Frederick the Great. Quantz, who visited London in 1727, when Handel was at the height of his operatic popularity, added a key to the flute and invented the sliding top for tuning the instrument. Here are specimens of the double and triple flutes-à-bec—often called flageolets—'pretty devices' much in use during the early part of the last century: one, two or three pipes could be played together or singly at the will of the performer. Exactly half a century ago one of the wonders of musical life in London was 'The Sardinian Minstrel,' an Italian peasant named Picco. The Musical World of February 23, 1856, thus records his first appearance in England:

Picco is twenty-five years of age, and has been blind from his birth. He plays upon an instrument, and its synonyme is 'Tibia.' This 'Tibia' is in length three inches, in shape a whistle, and it has three holes in the tube. Upon this curious or rather common piece of machinery, to our great surprise, 'Picco' performed a fantasia or medley of popular airs (accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Lejeune) in which the most rapid scales and bravura passages were executed with astonishing facility, to say nothing of delicacy, taste, and feeling. The tone 'Picco' produces is between that of a flageolet and flauto 'Picco-lo'—at times somewhat shrill, at others as soft and suave as possible. Altogether, 'Picco' is a most ingenious fellow, considering the means he has at command. The 'Sardinian Minstrel' will no doubt become popular during the season. His talent is peculiar, his instrument peculiar, and his appearance extremely prepossessing.

Mr. Galpin possesses a picco—a diminutive instrument only  $3\frac{1}{2}$  inches long—of which a full description is given in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.'

The photograph on p. 525 shows Mr. Galpin's fine quartet of recorders, c. 1600—treble in g', alto in d', tenor in g, and bass in c.*

The music of the Morris Dance of olden times is recalled by a pipe having three holes, which was used with the tabor and a small drum. By the employment of the harmonics the little instrument has a compass of two octaves. It was played with the fingers of the left hand, the tabor being suspended from the left arm and struck by a small stick held in the right hand. Subjoined is a tune of Queen Elizabeth's time played upon the pipe and tabor and used for the Morris Dance in the village pageant and old English pastimes held

A GROUP OF CHINESE INSTRUMENTS.

The flageolet family, well represented at Hatfield Vicarage, recalls one of those 'pretty' entries of Mr. Pepys in his entertaining Diary. He writes, on January 20, 1667-68:

I did stop at Dumbleboy's, the pipe-maker, there to advise about the making of a flageolet to go low and soft; and he do shew me a way which do do, and also a fashion of having two pipes of the same note fastened together, so as I can play on one, and then echo it upon the other, which is mighty pretty.

'Come, some music! Come the recorders!' says Shakespeare in Hamlet, and does not Mr. Pepys record his liking for those instruments? He notes, on April 8, 1668:

Did buy a recorder, which I intend to learn to play on, the sound of it being of all sounds in the world most pleasing to me.

Cornetti, or cornets, were very popular in the 16th and 17th centuries for open air music or for supporting the voices in the singing of chorales. They are wooden instruments covered with leather and pierced with holes like a flute, but played with a small cup mouthpiece (see the illustration on p. 525). Owing to the difficulty of blowing and of securing true intonation they gradually fell into disuse; but Evelyn in his Diary (December 21, 1662), after a visit to the Chapel Royal, thus refers to their disappearance:

One of his Majesty's chaplains preached; after which, instead of the ancient, grave, and solemn wind music accompanying the organ, was introduced a concert of twenty-four violins between every pause, after the French fantastical light way, better suiting a tavern, or playhouse, than a church. This was the first time of change, and now we no more heard the cornet which gave life to the organ; that instrument quite left off in which the English were so skilful.

Bach occasionally employed the cornet in his church cantatas to support the voices. The serpent—well represented in the Galpin collection—invented about 1600 and improved under the personal direction of King George III., was, with its immediate successor, the ophicleide, the last survivor of the cornetto family. The earliest specimen at Hatfield is a silver-mounted cornetto curvo, treble, in c', dated 1518 and of German manufacture.

Of single reed instruments—the clarinet is a familiar modern example—the earliest type is the Egyptian argihoul, a double pipe, each tube having a single vibrating tongue made of cane. The pibcorn, or hornpipe—eighteen inches long, made of horn, and having seven finger-holes—was formerly very popular in Wales. Played by the shepherds, this little rustic instrument is said to have given the name to the dance known as the hornpipe. The aulos, or tibia, of the ancient Greeks, is the earliest European example of the double reed instrument, the prototype of the oboe and bassoon of our modern orchestra. To this class also belongs the shawm, to which reference is made by the Psalmist. The shawm (schalmey, from calamus, a reed) was the popular double-reed instrument of mediæval times. (Illustrations on p. 525). A quaint description of the instrument is found among the 'proverbs' formerly inscribed on the walls of Leckington House, near Beverley, Yorkshire:

A Shawme maketh a swete sounde for he tynthe the basse:
It mountithe not to hye but kepithe rule and space:
Yet yf it be blowne withe to vehement a wynde,
It maketh it to mysgerve out of his kynde.

An early form of the oboe was the watchman's pipe, or waight, Mr. Galpin's specimen being of the late 17th century. This instrument was used by the town waits, who played in the streets at intervals during the night. It is not known whether the instrument gave the name to the players, or the players to the instrument. Two examples of the bassoon branch of the double-reed family deserve mention—a fagottino (c. 1700), made by C. J. Denner, the inventor of the clarinet, and a double bassoon (Vienna, c. 1815), which gives the 32-ft. B flat—a note which Haydn in his 'Creation' assigns to the instrument at the last word of the following sentence:

By heavy beasts the ground is trod.

As this note—the 32-ft. B flat—is marked to be played fortissimo, Haydn must have had in his mind some very heavy beasts.

Stringed instruments must now claim our attention. Precedence may be given to the tromba marina, a remarkable instrument in that it is evolved from the ancient monochord, the rebab, or Arabian one-stringed fiddle, played with a bow. The tromba marina—of which Mr. Galpin has a very fine specimen (see the illustration on p. 522)—is an instrument over six feet in length. Its only string is a thick violoncello d string stretched over a peculiar bridge, and the instrument is played by a double-bass bow, plentifully rosined. The open string is usually tuned to D, and when set in vibration by the bow it yields a powerful note, harsh and nasal in character, not unlike an 8-ft. wooden organ reed-pipe. It has been said that 'played by stopping in the usual way, the tromba marina produces tones far less melodious than the bray of a donkey'; but in the hands of a skilful performer the harmonics which can be obtained from the instrument are by no means asinine.

The present specimen is provided with sympathetic strings conealed within the hollow body of the instrument. These additional strings of thin wire were first attached to the old English viols as stated by Praetorius (1619) and by Playford in his 'Musick's Recreation on the Viol Lyra-way' (1661). The latter, describing the Lyra-viol, says that it was a viola-da-gamba 'strung with lute strings and wire strings, the one above the other, so that by striking those strings above with the bow, a sound was drawn from those of wire beneath, which made it very harmonious. Of this this collection, these sympathetic strings were afterwards attached to the viola d'amore and to the baryton, which became popular in the late 17th and 18th centuries, and was the favourite instrument of sort of viols I have seen many, but time and disuse has set them aside.' He ascribes the invention to David Farunt. As will be seen from specimens in Haydn's patron, Prince Esterhazy. The presence of sympathetic strings in the tromba marina explains the 'echo' effect which Mr. Pepys, with his keen observation, records in his Diary under October 24, 1667 :

To Charing Cross, there to see Polichinelli. But, it being begun, we in to see a Frenchman, at the house where my wife's father last lodged, one Monsieur Prin, play on the trump-marine, which he do beyond belief: and the truth is it do far outdo a trumpet as nothing more, and he do play anything very true, and it is most admirable and at first was a mystery to me that I should hear a whole concert of chords together at the end of a pause, but he showed me that it was only when the last notes were 5ths or 3rds, are to another, and then their sounds like an Echo did last so as they seemed to sound altogether. The instrument is open at the end, I discovered; but he would not let me look into it, but I was mightily pleased with it, and he did take great pains to shew me all he could do on it, which was very much, and would make an excellent concert, two or three of them, better than trumpets can ever do, because of their want of compass.

Seven years later the public were able to hear such a concert as Mr. Pepys suggested, for in the London Gazette of February 4, 1674, we find the following advertisement :

A Rare Concert of four Trumpets Marine, never heard of before in England. If any persons desire to come and hear it, they may repair to the Fleece tavern near St. James's, about two of the Clock in the afternoon every day in the week, except Sundays. Every Concert shall continue one hour, and so to begin again. The best places are one shilling, and the others six-pence.

The name tromba marina (marine trumpet) is generally supposed to have been given to the instrument on account of its external resemblance to the large speaking-trumpet used on board Italian vessels, being of the same length and tapering shape; but Mr. Galpin considers that it took its name from a famous trumpet player of the 15th century, Marino or Marigni, who probably improved an earlier form.

The rebec, or three-stringed fiddle, in shape resembling the mandolin (see p. 528), was in use throughout Western Europe in the Middle Ages. Its loud and harsh tone doubtless favoured its choice as an instrument to be played in the street. That Shakespeare's musicians in 'Romeo and Juliet' were rebec players, or rebecists, is obvious, as he named them Hugh Rebeck, Simon Catling and James Soundpost. A rebec keeps good company in the collection with a six-stringed treble viol, made by Henry Jaye, of Southwark, in 1632, and a lyra-viol by W. Addison, of London, 1665. But of all his strings Mr. Galpin prefers the viol-da-gamba, or bass viol, and his favourite instrument is a fine specimen, in perfect preservation, the work of the famous English maker

CHITARRONE, OR BASS LUTE

ITALIAN: MAGNUS STEGER? c. 1640.

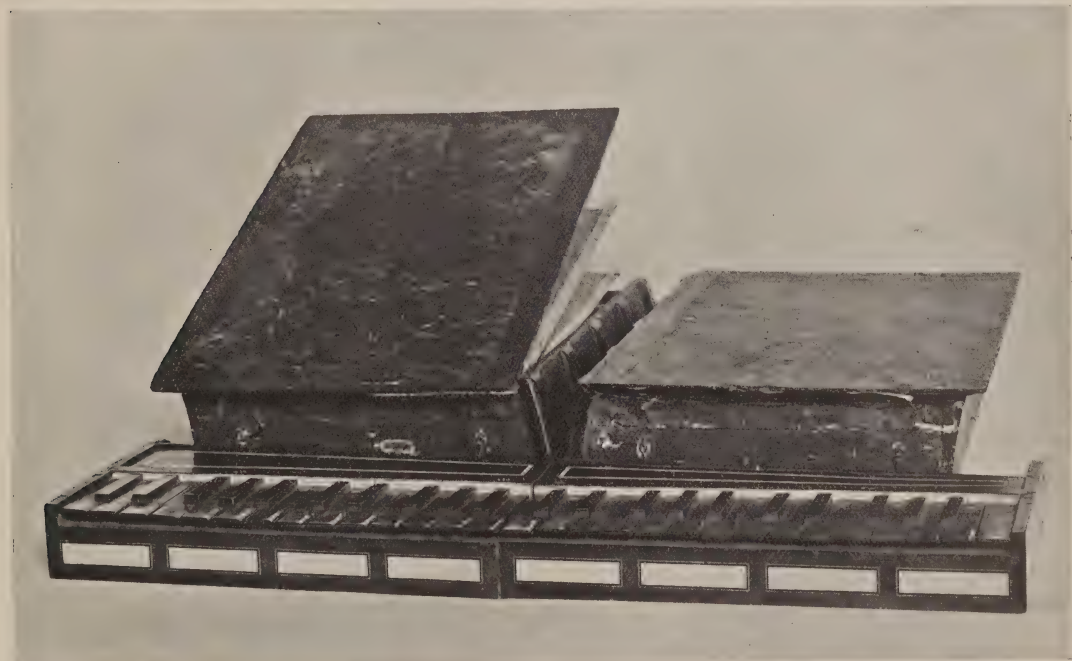

Henry Jaye, of Southwark, in 1611. Its finger board and tail piece are inlaid with coloured woods in strange devices as shown in the illustration on p. 529. Mrs. Galpin—to whom we are indebted for the photograph of her husband—has studied the lute and uses a sweet-toned instrument with the characteristically reversed peg-box, dated 1593, by Rauwolf, of Nuremberg; or, for accompanying the voice, a theorboe-lute having twenty-four strings and a double peg-box, made in 1619, at Antwerp by Matthey Hoffman. This larger instrument had not long been in use in England at this date (1619), if we may rely upon an anecdote told by Dr. Plume in his 17th century pocket-book still in MS. 'Inigo Jones,' he writes, 'first brought the theorboe into England presumably after the popish conspiracy of 1605. At Dover it was thought to be some engine brought from popish countries to destroy the King, and he and it were sent up to the Council table.' Fortunately the famous architect was able to satisfy the Privy Council of his peaceable intentions.

The accompanying illustration is that of a beautiful Italian chitarrone, procured by Mr. Galpin in Rome and decorated with precious stones and ivory and mother-of-pearl inlay: it is probably the work of Magnus Steger, of Venice, an artificer of the 17th century. The chitarrone, formerly used in Italian orchestras, was the largest form of lute—the present specimen is 6 ft. 4 in. in height—the long bass strings producing great resonance. In the same category is the spitz-harp, or double psaltery (17th century), which differs from the ordinary psaltery in having strings on both sides of the soundboard. On the left-hand side are the brass accompaniment-strings, and on the right hand the steel melody-strings. Mr. Galpin's spitz-harp has two sets of melody strings—one single, the other double. The soundboard is profusely painted with representations of birds, insects, flowers, and amorette, and the instrument was evidently made for a present to a young bride whose portrait appears on the side. Of the harp family special attention is called to an Irish clarsach, known as the 'Bunworth' harp, made by John Kelly in 1734.

Among the interesting specimens of keyboard instruments, the place of honour must be accorded to the Bible Regal, a small and portable organ, of which an illustration is given on the opposite page.

A reed-pipe instrument of penetrating and sustaining tone, four octaves in compass, the Bible Regal derives its name from its book-like appearance when enclosed in its case. The covers of the book form the bellows of the instrument: under the keyboard are the wind chest and the pipes, which are true organ pipes with 'beating' reeds, but very small. The keyboard can be folded up and packed under the bellows, and when the 'book covers'—hinged something like a draught board—are shut up, the instrument assumes the form of a big book. The inventory of the musical instruments belonging to Henry VIII. included thirteen pairs of single regals, and down to the year 1773 (the date of the death of Bernard Gates) there was at the English Court the office of 'tuner of the Regals in the King's household.' The regal

Vicarage did space permit—e.g., the collection of American-Indian instruments, described by Mr. Galpin in a paper read before the Musical Association in 1902, and the Chinese group (see illustration on p. 523). The latter includes many quaint and interesting instruments used in the Confucian temples: one of them is the Chu, shaped like a square tub, which starts the music of the religious ceremonies; while another called the Yu, in the form of a crouching tiger with a row of small spikes along its back, is rubbed quickly as a signal for the music to cease. There are here also specimens of the rare Hsuan or goose-egg whistle made of earthenware and dating from an unknown antiquity. Another devotional instrument is the Llama trumpet, which is a human thigh-bone covered with human skin! A remarkable is frequently mentioned by Elizabethan dramatists and even earlier—e.g., Richard Edwards, the reputed composer of 'In going to my lonely bed,' thus mentions it as a stage direction in his 'Damon and Pythias, acted in 1565; 'Here Pythias sings and the regals play'; also when Pythias is carried to prison 'the regals play a mourning song.'

Among the interesting and early-dated keyboard instruments with strings are a pentagonal spinet made by Marcus Jadra, 1552, and a clavichord by Innocento Tosi, of Genoa, 1605, in addition to a virginal by Andreas Ruckers (Antwerp, 1610), stated by the late Mr. Hipkins to be the earliest extant specimen of the great artificer's famous work and made in the year in which he was admitted to the Guild of St. Luke as a Master.

Much might be written about the curiosities in musical instruments within the walls of Hatfield instrument from the North-west Provinces of India is called the nyastaranga. In this a thin skin is stretched over a small hole in a little cup mouth-piece, and when this is placed on the vibrating cords of the throat the sounds hummed by the performer are reproduced and intensified by the sympathetic vibration of the skin. Another name for the nyastaranga is the throat trumpet.

In one of the rooms stands the unique working-model of the Roman hydraulus or water organ, constructed by Mr. Galpin from representations found at Carthage and descriptions in ancient MSS. A detailed account of the instrument has been given by him in the Reliquary of July, 1904, and in a lecture delivered in London at the Exhibition of the Musicians' Company.

In the course of conversation Mr. Galpin tells us that his interest in musical instruments, recognized and encouraged by his parents, began in his school days at Sherborne, when he tried to obtain a practical knowledge of the various wind instruments used in the school orchestra, his own special instrument being the clarinet and his second instrument the viola. Mr. J. R. Sterndale Bennett, son of Sir Sterndale Bennett, was at that district and especially of his own church—in which he is ably supported by the organist, Mr. B. W. Worton—but he has an orchestra which at festivals accompanies the organ and enlivens the village concerts with Haydn's symphonies, Handel's concertos, and an occasional recorder quartet. In this way he endeavours to counteract the vulgar song-tunes which are imported into the village by 'holiday-makers from town,' and it is not uncommon to hear a theme of Haydn's or a strain of Mendelssohn's whistled by some village lad as he wends his way to work. The vicar realizes that from a purely musical point of view his efforts may never be successful, but the fact that through the winter months his parishioners are trying to perfect themselves in some classical composition and moulding their rougher natures to musical expression must, we believe, be useful and beneficial. As a member of the Technical Education Committee he has endeavoured to obtain from the county authorities the recognition of the study of orchestral instruments as a technical subject, but hitherto without success, although vocal music is allowed.

time conductor of the choir and orchestra, and it is to the excellent programmes of the school concerts that Mr. Galpin largely attributes his predilection for good music. His first real treasure, however, came to him at Cambridge in the form of a serpent, a terribly seductive thing to an undergraduate. It was here, too, at Trinity College that as librarian of the University Musical Society he came under the influence of Sir Charles Stanford, who composed for and dedicated to him the three Intermezzi for pianoforte and clarinet or violin (Op. 13). After taking his degree in the Classical Tripos he went as soon as possible to parochial work, and in his curacies in Norfolk and afterwards at St. Giles-in-the-Fields, London, he started and conducted a fife and drum band for the boys, a brass band for the young men, in which he played the alto slide trombone, and an Orchestral Society, for Mr. Galpin has always firmly believed in the excellent moral influence which music, well chosen and properly controlled, exercises over young people.

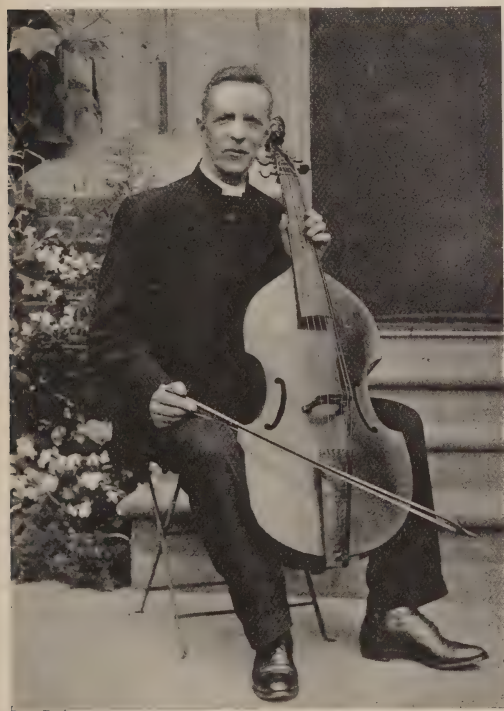

In his present parish of under 700 people, as Precentor of the Deanery Choral Festival, he not only devotes himself to the choir music of the REBEC AND BOW.

ITALIAN. 18TH CENTURY.

In regard to his collection, Mr. Galpin's aim has been to gather together representative instruments which shall illustrate not only the main types in use at the present time, but the earlier forms from which they were evolved. On this principle his museum is arranged; and as most of the specimens are in playing order, it affords much greater interest to practical musicians than the usual collection of highly-decorative but voiceless instruments. In his London curacy, for instance, his Bible Regal was used for hymn-singing at the Seven-Dials Mission; his contra-fagotto (of 1817) he has played in Haydn's 'Creation'; his serpent in Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul'; and the ophicleide in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' all original parts for these respective instruments. On the lines of his systematic classification was based the Crystal Palace Exhibition of Musical Instruments (1900), in which he took a prominent part, and in 1901 he was invited to America to arrange and describe the magnificent Crosby Brown Collection in the Metropolitan Museum of New York. In 1903 the Committee of the Stockholm Historical and Musical Museum asked his assistance in the preparation of their catalogue, and last year the Honorary Freedom of the Worshipful Company of Musicians was conferred on him in recognition of his services at the Tercentenary Exhibition. A large number of his instruments have appeared in book illustrations, for which purpose he is always willing to lend them, and they have been frequently used at concerts and lectures, given, not only by Mr. Galpin himself, but by Sir Frederick Bridge, the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, and other well-known musicians. His interest in the evolution of musical instruments from primitive forms and his personal acquaintance with most of the public and private collections at home and abroad have placed his name among the writers in the new edition of Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.

Lest, however, it should be thought that Mr. Galpin's tastes are wholly centred in this special hobby, it is due to him to mention that as a Fellow of the Linnean Society he is a keen field botanist, and has written a flora of his Norfolk parish; whilst as a member of the Council of the Essex Archæological Society he has unearthed and published many records of the past which lay buried beneath the soil or hidden in the manuscript rooms of our great Museums.

THOMAS BRITTON.

THE MUSICAL SMALL-COAL MAN.

(1654?—1714.)

Tho' mean thy rank, yet in thy humble cell
Did gentle Peace and Arts unpurchas'd dwell.
Well pleased Apollo thither led his train,
And Musick warbled in her sweetest strain:
Cyllenius so, as Fables tell, and Jove
Came willing guests to poor Philemon's grove.
Let useless pomp behold, and blush to find
So low a station, such a liberal mind.

Thomas Britton was born in Northamptonshire about the middle of the 17th century. This vague information has been supplemented by the statement that either at Higham Ferrers or Wellingborough, or thereabouts, the musical small-coal man first saw the light. All attempts to discover the actual place and date of his birth have failed.* As a boy Britton made his way to London, and apprenticed himself for seven years to a vendor of small coal who carried on his business in St. John Street, Clerkenwell. This good man evidently regarded the Northamptonshire lad as a possible competitor in supplying the firegrates of the Clerkenwellers, as at the end of the apprenticeship he gave Thomas a small sum of money not to set up a rival coal-store. Britton then returned to his native county, not however without keeping an eye on Clerkenwell as a desirable coal distributing centre. It is said that when he had spent all his money he again turned his steps Londonwards, and hired a stable near his apprenticeship quarters where he started business on his own account.

At that time Clerkenwell was a more or less aristocratic quarter of the town. A document preserved in the British Museum (Sloane MS. 3928) contains a list of householders in Clerkenwell, with the rents they paid, in the year 1677. Among the 'quality' who resided 'on the Greene' were :

* In this connection we are much indebted to Mr. J. E. Smith, organist of Rushden Parish Church, for having made local inquiries and searched parish registers, unfortunately without result.

Sir William Bowles, Bart	-	-	£20
Lady Povey	-	-	18
Lady Wright	-	-	40
Sir Richard Cheverton	-	-	45

'Thomas Brittain, small coalman' is recorded as living in St. John's Lane, the amount of his rent being £4 per annum. Mr. George Potter, the well-known antiquary of Highgate, has in his possession a 'deed of partition' referring to property in Clerkenwell, which he has very kindly placed at our disposal for the purpose of this biographical sketch. The 'deed of partition,' dated October 20, 1687, includes the message in 'St. John's Close fronting Clerkenwell Greene in the occupation of Thomas Brittan collyer.' (Thus we have already three different spellings of the name !) It is more than probable that this 'message' stood in what is now Aylesbury Street, at the north-east corner of Jerusalem Passage. For many years a public-house named 'The Bull's Head' occupied the site, but this, with a large number of surrounding houses, is about to be demolished by the London County Council as one of their beneficial clearances.

To return to Mr. Britton. He divided his stable into two portions, retaining the ground floor as a receptacle for his small-coal, and turning the upper part into a long room, access to which was gained by a staircase from outside the premises. In this upper-story the musical small-coal man started his celebrated concerts in the year 1678. Let us, before proceeding farther, learn what Edward Ward, author of 'The London Spy,' has to say about this remarkable enterprise. The following quotation from his 'A compleat and humorous account of the remarkable Clubs in the Cities of London and Westminster' (1745), speaks for itself in Ned Ward's amusing description of the musical doings at Britton's concert-room in Clerkenwell :

THE SMALL-COAL-MAN'S MUSICK CLUB.

This harmonious Society of Tickle-Fiddle-Gentlemen has been of long standing at the diminutive habitation of an honest Small-Coal-Man who happens to be a near neighbour to St. John of Jerusalem.

Britton never suffered the flatteries of his betters to lift him up above the care of his employment ; for though he always took delight to spend his leisure hours in the studies of a gentleman, yet he limited his industry to the trade he had been bred to ; and though he was master enough of musick to play his part tolerably well upon several instruments, yet he would not grow too proud, for the profitable tune of small-coal, or lay aside his sack till his day's work was over, to dance after a fiddle, having sense enough to consider that spare time and empty sound were the most agreeable concomitants, and that pleasure always ought to be postpon'd to business.

The room in which the concerts were held is described as having been 'very long and narrow, with a ceiling so low, that a tall man could but just stand upright in it' ; and the staircase 'could scarce be ascended without crawling.' But we may let

Mr. Ward enlarge upon this circumscribed music-room in his own facetious descriptiveness :

Yet the hut wherein he dwells, which has long been honoured with such good company, looks without side as if some of his ancestors had happened to be executors to old snarling Diogenes, and that they had carefully transplanted the Athenian-Tub into Clerkenwell ; for his house is not much higher than a canary-pipe, and the window of his state-room but very little bigger than the bung-hole of a cask. Though, sometimes since for the more commodious entertainment of his Thursday's audience, he had taken a convenient room out of the next house that the company might not stew in summer-time like sweaty dancers at a buttock-ball, or like seamen's wives in a Gravesend tile-boat, when the fleet lies at Chatham.

But a worse use than he expected, happening to be made of the additional liberty he had given to the company, occasion'd him, for some reasons best known to himself, to reduce his Society to their primitive station, who, though they have lost something of their primitive glory, yet they constantly continue their Thursday's meeting, where any body that is willing to take a hearty sweat may have the pleasure of hearing many notable performances in the charming science of musick.

Ward concludes his account of Britton's concerts with some rhymes, of which the following may serve as a sample :

Upon Thursdays repair
To my palace, and there
Hobble up stair by stair ;
But I pray ye take care
That you break not your shins by a stumble :
And without e'er a souse
Paid to me or my spouse,
Sit as still as a mouse
At the top of my house,
And then you shall hear how we fumble.

In 'his own little cell' at Clerkenwell Britton gave on every Thursday those remarkable concerts of vocal and instrumental music with which his name is so honourably associated. Started in 1678 as a musical club, these music-makings continued for nearly forty years. At first no charge was made for admission, but afterwards, it is said, Britton's patrons had to pay an annual subscription of 10s., and those who wished to partake of refreshments were supplied with coffee at 'a penny a dish.' Ralph Thoresby, the antiquary, however, records that the concerts were free in his time, as on June 5, 1712, his diary contains this entry :

In our way home called at Mr. Britton's, the noted small-coal man, where we heard a noble concert of music, vocal and instrumental, the best in town, which for many years past he has had weekly for his own entertainment, and of the gentry, &c., gratis, to which most foreigners of distinction, for the fancy of it, occasionally resort.

The performers at these weekly concerts included the most famous amateurs and professionals of the day. Sir Roger L'Estrange, the Tory journalist and pamphleteer, fostered, if he did not actually originate, the Club : as one of the best players of the viol-da-gamba he would discourse sweet music on his instrument, and among the amateurs who joined in sweet consort were John Hughes, the poet, and Woolaston, the painter. And what shall be said in praise of the professionals who took part? Their names will be the best answer to that question: Banister played the violin, Dr. Pepusch presided at a virginal by Ruckers, thought to be the best in Europe, and George Frederick Handel, Esquire, then under thirty years of age, played the organ, a pedalless instrument of only five stops. Moreover, these concerts held above the coal store were society functions, even leaders of fashion like the beautiful Duchess of Queensberry being among the audience. We are told that Britton 'pricked very neatly and accurately' the music that was performed, and proof of this is furnished by a volume in the Bodleian Library, a transcript of Corelli's 'Twelve sonatas for four-stringed instruments,' which contains a note to the following effect:

These Lessons are in the hand writing of old Thomas Britton, the famous musical small-coal man, & used at his Assembly for many years.

A great collector of books, Britton formed a fine musical library and gathered together some valuable instruments. In his 'History of Music,' Hawkins prints the entire catalogue of the musical possessions of Britton, sold after the small-coal man's death. It is entitled:

A CATALOGUE of extraordinary musical instruments made by the most eminent workmen both at home and abroad. Also divers valuable compositions, ancient and modern, by the best masters in Europe; a great many of which are finely engrav'd, neatly bound, and the whole carefully preserv'd in admirable order; being the entire collection of Mr. THOMAS BRITTON of Clerkenwell, small-coal man, lately deceased, who at his own charge kept up so excellent a consort forty odd years at his dwelling-house, that the best masters were at all times proud to exert themselves therein; and persons of the highest quality desirous of honouring his humble cottage with their presence and attention: but death having snatched away this most valuable man that ever enjoyed so harmonious a life in so low a station, his music books and instruments, for the benefit of his widow, are to be sold by auction on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, the 6th, 7th, and 8th Decemb. at Mr. Ward's house in Red Bull-Yard, in Clerkenwell, near Mr. Britton's, where Catalogues are to be had gratis; also at most Music-shops about town. Conditions of sale as usual.

Britton's collection of instrumental music, 160 lots, is followed by vocal music, scores, and musical instruments, as hereunder subjoined:

There are a great many books that Mr. Britton had collected in most parts of learning, the whole consisting of 14 or 1500 books, which will shortly be sold at his late dwelling-house. But the manner and method of sale is not yet concluded on.

Thomas Britton's non-business interests were by no means restricted to music. He formed the acquaintance of one of his neighbours, Dr. Theophilus Garencières, physician to the French Ambassador. To quote from Hearne : 'He [Britton, through his acquaintance with the French doctor] became an excellent chymist, and, perhaps, he performed such things in that profession as had never been done before, with little cost and charge, by the help of a moving elaboratory, that was contrived and built by himself, which was much admired by all of that Faculty, that happened to see it, inasmuch that a gentleman of Wales was so much taken with it, that he was at the expense of carrying him down to that country, on purpose to build him such another, which Tom performed to the gentleman's very great satisfaction, and for the same he received of him a very handsome and generous gratuity.'

This 'extraordinary and very valuable man' turned his attention to the occult sciences, evidence of which is furnished by the large collection of books relating thereto that he acquired. No less remarkable for a man in such humble circumstances was his passionate love of literature. An ardent bibliomaniac, his book-collecting zeal brought him into friendly relations with Harley, Earl of Oxford, the Duke of Devonshire, and the Earls of Pembroke, Winchelsea, and Sunderland. On Saturday afternoons in winter these noblemen formed a party of book-hunters who scoured the city for literary treasure-trove, often being accompanied by another noble man—truly 'a companion of gentlemen'—in the person of Thomas Britton. Attired in his blue linen smock, the small-coal man doubtless acted as cicerone to those peers of the realm, and at the same time enriched his own collection. Concerning this, Ward says :

The better to demonstrate his love of ingenuity, he has made a very good collection, to his great expence, of antient and modern musick by the best masters, and, some years since picked up in his walks a very handsome library, which not long since was publicly disposed of to a considerable advantage, and has now by him a great many curiosities that by persons of judgment are esteemed valuable.

The extraordinary extent and variety of Britton's library may be judged from two different sale-catalogues, copies of which are preserved at the British Museum. The first, a quarto of forty pages and of the year 1694, is entitled :

The Library of MR. THO. BRITTON small coalman, Being a curious collection of books in Divinity, History, Physick and Chymistry, in all volumes.

Also an extensive collection of Manuscripts in Latin and English.

Will be sold by auction at Toms Coffee-House, adjoining to Ludgate, on Thursday the 1st of November [1694] at three in the afternoon by JOHN BULLORD.

The London Gazette, No. 3026 (November 8 to 12, 1694) contains this advertisement relating to the closing day of the sale :

At Tom's Coffee-House adjoining to Ludgate, at 3 this after Noon, will be sold by Auction the Curious Collection of Manuscripts in Divinity, History, Chymistry, Physick, and Magick, &c. in Lat. and Eng. in all Volumes ; as also the Books of Cuts and loose Prints by the best Masters, being the last part of the Library of Mr. Tho. Britton, Small-coal man.

The catalogue contains 1,218 lots, the books covering a wide range of subjects, divinity not being absent, in addition to a large number of tracts and 146 'bundles of pamphlets,' and concluding with 'books of cuts and a collection of prints by the best masters.'

Whether Britton sold all his books at that time (1694) and then began collecting again, or retained a nucleus for forming another library, is uncertain; anyhow, after his death another sale, quite distinct from his musical books, took place. The catalogue, consisting of thirty closely printed pages, is entitled:

The Library of Mr. THOMAS BRITTON small-coal man deceas'd.

Who at his own charge kept up a Consort of Musick above 40 years, in his little cottage.

Being a curious collection of very ancient and uncommon books, in Divinity, History, Physick, Chymistry, Magick, &c., in all volumes.

Also a collection of MSS. chiefly on vellum.

Sold by auction at Paul's Coffeehouse the West End of St. Paul's on Monday 24 January, 1714, by Thomas Ballard, Bookseller, at the Rising Sun in Little Britain, where catalogues may be had, also . . . at his [Britton's] late dwelling-cottage near Clerkenwell.

Here we find 1,036 lots, in addition to books of maps, fifty lots of pamphlets, twenty three MSS. and 'several more, not mention'd'! The collection known as the 'Somers Tracts' is said to have been formed by him and sold to Lord Somers for over £500, and Sir Hans Sloane was a large purchaser at the sale of the library.

Throughout his life Britton remained the same modest, humble person befitting the station whereunto he had been called, and he continued to sell small-coal in the streets of London. His intimacy with so many persons of high rank and the nature of the 'quality' who attended his Thursday concerts gave rise to all sorts of rumours concerning him: he was suspected of being a magician, an atheist, a Jesuit, and a presbyterian! Away with all such insinuations. Thomas Britton was an honest, cultured working man, one of whom any country might be proud; as has been said, he was 'much admired both by the gentry, even of those of the best quality, and by all others of the more inferior rank that had any manner of regard for probity, ingenuity, diligence and humility.'

His death was brought about in a brutal manner. A Mr. Robe, a Middlesex magistrate, brought, unknown to Britton, to one of the Thursday concerts a clever ventriloquist—'one of those men that speak as it were from their bellies,' says the Harmonicon—named Samuel Honeyman, a blacksmith. Known as 'the talking smith,' it is said that 'the pranks played by this man, if collected, would fill a volume.' With the knowledge that Britton was superstitious, Honeyman said to him in an assumed voice that unless he at once fell down on his knees and repeated the Lord's Prayer he would die within a few hours. Greatly terrified at this as it seemed to him supernatural command, the musical small-coal man at once did as he was told; but the fright killed him, he took to his bed and actually died within a few days. The exact date of his death is unknown, but it must have been in the latter days of September, 1714. The British Mercury of September 29 to October 6, 1714, thus records the event:

Last Friday Mr. Thomas Britton, the famous Musical Small-Coal-Man, was bury'd, who was universally known to all Lovers of Musick, of what Quality soever; and who had for 46 Years kept a Consort once a Week at his own House, and at his own Expence, purely for the Entertainment of his Friends and his own Satisfaction. He has left behind him a very valuable Library of Musical and other books of Literature, besides a considerable Collection of the choicest Musical Instruments.

His remains were interred in the old church of St. James's, Clerkenwell—not the present building, consecrated in 1792—the entry in the burial register reading:

Thomas Briton was buried in the vault the 1st day of October.

As showing the great respect in which he was held his funeral was attended by a very large concourse of people. No stone or other memorial exists of this remarkable man of Clerkenwell, and it would seem most fitting that a brass tablet to his memory should be placed in the church of the parish in which he lived and died.

Britton is described as short and stout in person and of 'an honest, ingenuous countenance.' His portrait, which forms the portrait supplement to this biographical sketch, is photographed from the original oil-painting in the National Portrait Gallery. One of two painted by Woolaston, it represents the musical small-coal man wearing a grey suit or smock and a black hat, holding his coal-measure in his hand. The circumstance attending the painting of this portrait is too interesting not to be related in full, from information supplied by Woolaston himself. Britton had been out on his rounds in the city one morning, and 'having nearly emptied his coal-sack in a shorter time than he expected, had a mind to see his friend Mr. Woolaston. But having always been used to consider himself in two capacities—viz., as one who subsisted by a very mean occupation, and as a companion for persons in a station of life above him, he could not, drest as he then was, make a visit. He, therefore, on his way home, varied his usual round, and, passing through Warwick Lane [a turning off Newgate Street], determined to cry small-coal so near to Mr. Woolaston's door, as to stand a chance of being invited in by him. Accordingly he had no sooner turned into Warwick Court and cried small coal in his usual tones:

Small coal.

than Woolaston, who had never heard him there before, flung up the window and beckoned him in.' After some conversation the artist expressed a desire to paint a portrait of his visitor, and as the small-coal man 'modestly yielded to this request,' the result was the picture which is now the property of the nation.

In Memoriam
ROBERT SCHUMANN.

Fifty years have come and gone since Robert Alexander Schumann was called from earth by the great reaper whose name is death. The event—it cannot be called sad—calmed a genius mind that for two years previously had been clouded with mental affliction. Let gladness be the note to-day for the life of the master—a life which so enriched the art of music as to merit him a foremost place among the greatest of tone-poets. One has only to think of his pianoforte concerto, his symphonies, his chamber music, his pianoforte compositions, and his songs—to name those of his works that are best known—in order to look up to Schumann as a mighty master of music, and to regard him as a creative artist richly endowed with the rare attributes of melody and poetic grace.

In recalling the circumstances attending the master's death one cannot refrain from alluding to the tender devotion of his gifted wife who, during the last months of her husband's fatal illness, was paying her first visit to England, when she introduced the famous Pianoforte concerto and played at many concerts during a period of intense anxiety. No less touching is the recollection of the warm-hearted friendship of Joachim and Brahms during the closing years of the life of one so dear to them. It was at Endenich, near Bonn, that Schumann drew his last breath on July 29, 1856. Through the courtesy of Dr. von der Helm, the present proprietor of the Privat Heil und Pflege Anstalt at Endenich, we are enabled to give a view of the house in which Schumann passed the last two years of his life, his rooms being those in the uppermost floor of the extreme left-hand side of the building. His remains were followed to their final resting-place—the beautiful cemetery at Bonn—by Joachim and Brahms, the latter placing, on behalf of Clara Schumann, the only wreath on the coffin.

Carlyle says, 'Great men taken up in any way are profitable company. We cannot look upon a great man without learning something by him.' In the spirit of these words has this In Memoriam been written of a great man who bore the honoured name of Robert Schumann.

CATHEDRALS AND CHURCHES IN NORTHERN FRANCE.*

The ecclesiological enthusiasm and descriptive gifts of Mr. T. Francis Bumpus are further shown in this attractive volume on the cathedrals and churches in Northern France. In THE MUSICAL TIMES of October, 1903, extracts were given from an interesting book by him on 'Cathedrals in Northern Germany,' and no less pleasure attends a similar process in regard to the outcome of the author's summer holidays across the Channel. As in his other literary productions, the book before us deals mainly with the architecture of the stately edifices therein so graphically described, but here and there the author touches on musical matters connected with the various services at which he was present. He tells us that on one morning at Nôtre-Dame, Paris :

WEST FRONT, ST. GATIEN, TOURS.

(From 'Summer holidays among the glories of Northern France: her cathedrals and churches.' By T. Francis Bumpus.)

Thomas of Celano's world-famed Sequence is sung to its original setting, though certain verses, notably 'Quantus tremor est futurum,' 'Mors stupebit et natura,' 'Rex tremendæ majestatis' and 'Confutatis maledictis' are taken, with an effect perfectly thrilling, en faux bourdon, that is to say, with harmony added to the plain-song in a manner corresponding, I suppose, to Tallis's exquisite embroidering of the plain-tune versicles and responses as set forth in the first Service Book of Edward VI.

At Tours Cathedral the organ rebelled, probably as a protest against being played upon by a priest. Mr. Bumpus says :

An ecclesiastic plays the organ, which behaves itself very well until the Offertorium, when, upon the performer essaying a very elaborate piece in honour of the occasion, it becomes intractable, causing the poor curé to get crimson of visage and to cast sundry agonised glances across the choir at the brette'd canons. But these dignitaries seem quite unmoved, sitting in their stalls with closed eyes and folded hands, affecting to take no notice whatever of the matter. Not so sundry of the choirboys, whose faces give tokens of risibility.

It may not be generally known that cooks are honoured with a patron saint. Here is the information :

I once had the good fortune to be present in Amiens Cathedral during a late week-night service. It was July 29, and the festival of St. Martha, the patron saint of cooks, a large body of whom were present, and accommodated with chairs in the choir between the two rows of celebrated carved stalls. Anything more impressive in a Continental church than this service I do not remember, the ritual being most magnificent and carried out with that pomp for which Amiens has always been celebrated.

THE CHOIR, BAYEUX CATHEDRAL.

(From 'Summer holidays among the glories of Northern France: her cathedrals and churches.' By T. Francis Bumpus.)

The cathedral of Bourges is one of the most majestic in France, among its chief claims to distinction being 'the five great western portals which, viewed by themselves, are truly noble.'

* 'Summer holidays among the glories of Northern France, her cathedrals and churches.' By T. Francis Bumpus. (London : E. T. W. Dennis & Sons, Ltd.)

Here the holiday-maker was impressed with the music and commends the organist :

The music was that as set in the 'Paroissien' for a 'messe des doubles ordinaires'—the 'Missa de Angelis' so familiar to us at home. Between each Kyrie, instead of executing an elaborate fantasia totally foreign to the solemnity of this portion of the Office, the organist at the west end very judiciously took up the plain-song strain and improvised upon it without losing sight of its severe character.

At the church of St. Étienne, Auxerre :

The glorious old hymns, O Salutaris Hostia and Tantum ergo, are sung to the accompaniment of a trombone, the successor of the 'serpent.'

In describing a procession round the church of St. Étienne, at Beauvais, Mr. Bumpus refers to the effect of a 'good swinging tune' :

Various pieces of music were sung during the lengthy perambulation of the church : now a short metrical Litany ; anon a hymn to a good swinging Gallican tune—none of that lugubrious moaning and groaning of Gregorians, to which I had so frequently been a martyr in Norman church processions, being indulged in on this occasion ; next a Psalm to a very melodious Roman chant ; and lastly the Miserere to the same elongated form of the Second Tone—the Tonis Tristis—I had heard in St. Pierre at Caen.

Benediction brought this impressive function to a close ; and then after a brilliant sortie on the organ, during which chairs were being put back in their places by the parochial Mr. Sownds and Mrs. Miff with, I thought, a good deal of unnecessary noise, I walked back in high good humour with all I had seen and heard to my hotel, from whose windows the polygonal apse of the structure I had just quitted appeared silhouetted with delightful effect against a sky from which the last flush of sunset had barely faded.

Information on the position of organs in continental churches is thus given :

The cathedral of Auxerre possesses two organs, the great one occupying a somewhat anomalous position in the south-west angle of the south transept. For the benefit of those who are unacquainted with the working of a great Continental church, it may be interesting to state that in nearly every one of large dimensions there are two organs—a large one for the Voluntaries and sorties ; for the interludes played between the Psalms, verses of the Gospel Canticles, and Office Hymns ; and for processions ; another in the choir to accompany the Plain Chant. The usual place for the great organ is at the west end, as at St. Omer, Dieppe, Rouen (Cathedral, St. Ouen, and St. Maclou), Amiens, Paris, Troyes, Coutances and Bayeux ; and in most instances the cases are very richly carved. In several great churches, however, it is to be found nearer the choir, as at Eu, Laon, Tours, and Rheims, where it occupies the transept ; Chartres, Metz and Strasburg, where it hangs above the nave arches with grand effect ; and Bruges, where in more than one church it stands upon the choir screen in a very dignified and English fashion.

Mr. Bumpus has an exceedingly pleasant way of imparting knowledge on architectural and ecclesiological matters, and a genial tone sounds throughout the whole of his descriptive letterpress. His 'Glories of Northern France,' which is profusely and excellently illustrated, would make an appropriate gift-book : it is one that may be read with advantage and enjoyment.

'There is nothing in the world more sympathizing, more humanizing, than music, and I think the more we English women and English men can do to encourage and show our appreciation of music the better for the country.'—H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught.

Occasional Notes.

'I got into a musical set [at Cambridge] . . . From associating with these men, and hearing them play, I acquired a strong taste for music, and used very often to time my walks so as to hear on week days the anthem in King's College Chapel. This gave me intense pleasure, so that my backbone would sometimes shiver. I am sure that there was no affectation or mere imitation in this taste, for I used generally to go by myself to King's College, and I sometimes hired the chorister boys to sing in my rooms. Nevertheless I am so utterly destitute of an ear, that I cannot perceive a discord, or keep time and hum a tune correctly ; and it is a mystery how I could possibly have derived pleasure from music.'

CHARLES DARWIN.

At the annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, held at Marlborough House on July 9, the Prince of Wales (President of the Board) said :

I should like to take this opportunity of quoting and emphasizing the following remarks made by the King when, as Prince of Wales, he presided at the annual meeting of the Associated Board in the year 1893 : 'It is also a great satisfaction to learn that the high-class work of the Board is becoming more and more widely known and appreciated. I feel confident that it cannot fail both to improve the average standard of teaching, and enable parents to make sure that their children are receiving a careful musical training. I might here take the advantage of remarking on the extraordinary popularity of examinations, or rather of certificates, without reference to their quality, and the consequent growth of self-constituted and irresponsible examining bodies. It is a matter to be much deprecated, and is not quite fair to parents, their children, or the teachers, for the value of certificates depends entirely on the standard of merit enforced, and on the ability of those who have to ascertain whether that standard has been reached.' The fact of having the most eminent representatives of musical teaching on the Board is the best guarantee of the worth of the certificates.

Music was recognized in the disposal of the King's birthday honours in the baronetcy conferred upon Mr. Edgar Speyer, and the knighthood bestowed on Mr. Charles H. Brett. The former is well known as chairman of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, and the latter bears an honoured name in musical circles in Belfast. Congratulations to Sir Edgar Speyer, Bart., and to Sir Charles Brett.

A recent issue of the Frankfurter Zeitung contained some interesting 'Reminiscences of a Musician' by Prof. Sigismund Bachrich, of Vienna, especially his account of Wagner's appearance in the Austrian capital for the purpose of introducing some concert arrangements of fragments from the 'Ring of the Nibelung.' Prof. Bachrich wrote :

At the first rehearsal Wagner was enthusiastically greeted by us, the members of the Court-opera orchestra. He thanked us with a friendly smile, but begged to be excused for keeping us waiting for a few moments. Thereupon he took off his hat and winter overcoat ; then a second coat, and stood before us in his shirt-sleeves. Then his manservant wound a long silken handkerchief round his throat; next he slipped into a thickly wadded velvet jacket, placed a broad velvet barret upon his head, and finally let his servant pull a pair of big felt shoes over his boots. In this attire, and in an evidently 'comfortable' mood, he mounted the conductor's rostrum. I will not stop to describe the rehearsal in detail, but must mention one peculiarity. When Wagner wished to sing a phrase to one of the players, he rarely hit the first note correctly. Generally he sang a fourth too low, or a third too high, though after some attempts he found the right one.

After each piece (at the concert) he seemed thoroughly exhausted and breathed heavily. I sat in the closest proximity to him, and as he required some rest, I offered him my chair, which he gratefully accepted. During the pauses between the pieces I stood at his side, and thus it came to pass that he addressed his frequent, spontaneous remarks to me. After the 'Feuerzauber' excerpt the applause would not cease. He sat on my chair and for a long time could not be induced to rise and acknowledge the plaudits of the public. He glanced steadfastly towards the Directors' box, where Frau Cosima sat, and contentedly smiling he said to me softly, in his Saxon dialect: 'Ach nee! was wird Muttern dazu sagen!' ('Oh my! what will mummy say to this!'). These words touched me deeply, yet I pressed the master to show himself once more to the people. The Viennese were evidently quite possessed with the desire to hear Wagner speak. After each piece they roared, and at last he had to advance to the front of the podium and really say something. He stood at my side, and when he realized what the audience desired, he remarked crossly: 'What will be the use of this talking; we really can't spare the time for it.' All the same, I observed how his eyes seemed restlessly to seek for a subject. The room was getting darker and darker. Suddenly flashes of lightning appeared, and loud thunder claps were heard—Wagner had found his 'motive' for a speech. He advanced and said: 'My very esteemed friends! accept my most deeply felt thanks for the great favour with which you greet my work. It gives me courage and hope for the success of my great life task. Now hark ye with me how even the heavens concern themselves with it, and call to me with the thunder's elemental force: "In this sign thou shalt be victorious."'

At that moment the lights were suddenly turned up again. It is impossible to describe the scene of enthusiasm which followed. Even we musicians, carried away by the audience, joined in the clamour by beating upon our instruments, as in the olden days the Longobardi clashed their weapons together when wishing to do honour to their chief.

The Vienna Hugo Wolf Society has been dissolved, no doubt because it was felt that there is no longer any need to make propaganda for the unfortunate master whom many admirers consider the greatest song-composer since Schubert. Wolf's belongings, which were taken care of by the Society at his death, have been disposed of as follows: The original manuscripts of forty-one of his best pieces go to the Imperial Court Library; his pianoforte, seventy-three objects of personal use, 144 pictures and photographs and the death-mask have been taken over by the Vienna Town Council for distribution among certain public collections, while the remainder—e.g., numerous unpublished compositions, his correspondence, library, moneys, copyrights, and the archives of the Wolf Society—have been placed in charge of the Richard Wagner Society.

Said the two to the tutor,

To tutor two tooters to toot?'*

The Magpie Madrigal Society, having just come of age, has presented its conductor, who has swayed the baton for these full score and one years, with a testimonial which took the form of silver candelabra. The occasion prompted one of the Magpies to pursue the even tenor of his ways by producing some smooth verses, wherein he furnished full proof of his 'Magpiety.' Here they are, reprinted by the kind permission of the writer, Mr. Charles L. Graves, and with the consent of Mr. Lionel Benson:

*Dear Lionel, this classic day
That crowns the labours of the season,
Demands the tribute of a lay—
And for a very special reason.
Magpies till now on history's page
Were merely noted as luck-bringers;
But you and we have come of age,
We are no longer minor singers.*

*Had I the quill of Grote, or Mill,—
The eloquence of Hensley Henson,—
In flowing prose I might compose
A eulogy of Lionel Benson.
But conscious that I cannot climb
Above the plane of humble platitude,
Let me essay in lowly rhyme
To give expression to our gratitude.*

*No sinecure your post has been
As trainer of our piebald forces;
For Magpies oftentimes are seen
To stray from proper vocal courses.
We have not always kept our eyes
Upon the stick, and there's no blinking
The fact that, when a Magpie tries,
It has a fatal knack of sinking.*

*Your choice of music may not quite
Have always gratified all sections,
But in the end we owned you right,
And learned to share your predilections:
And those who voted Brahms a bore,
Or found him too austere or tragic,
Long since their heresy foreswore,
And yielded to his sovran magic.*

*You favoured neither old nor new
In furthering our education,
But with a zeal impartial drew
On every school and every nation.
With you we hymned the spacious reign
Of Oriana, maid imperial,
And ranged from Lasso's freakish strain
To Palestrina the ethereal.*

*All styles in turn attention claimed—
The academic and the hectic;
Sure programmes never yet were framed
More catholic or more eclectic.
Nor have we shown in scores alone
Our unexampled versatility,
Dead and alive, the tongues are five
That own our polyglot agility.*

*Unsparring of your time and skill,
Alert to criticise abuses,
Home truths you often told us; still,
We gave you manifold excuses.
Yet though we sometimes stirred your ire
By "scooping," or by slipshod phrasing,
You were most ready to admire
If we did anything worth praising.*

*But, since this rhyme must have an end,
Let all who cherish this Society
Impress upon our Chief—and friend—
To persevere in his Magpiety!
Long may we see him, undismayed
Though basses bolt and tenors flatten,
Conduct his Black and White brigade
To victory with unflinching baton.*

C. L. G.

In a recent issue we drew attention to the frequency with which the German musical Press hints at, and even boldly prophesies the early advent, or at any rate the urgent need of, a musical renaissance. 'Things cannot go on much longer in this way' seems to be the key-note of these outpourings of dissatisfied scribes. And now M. Camille Saint-Saëns has given expression to his views on this engrossing subject in a weighty letter to the Vienna Neue Freie Presse. After sketching the evolution of the art from the first attempts at polyphony to Bach, and viâ Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Weber to Berlioz and Wagner, he says:

The most remarkable phenomenon of modern times is the emancipation of orchestral music. Originating, as Wagner has rightly observed, in the accompaniment to the peoples' dances, it has developed with a certain desire to separate from this foundation, but especially with a desire for colour which possessed musicians after they had in the preceding periods concerned themselves above all with drawing (song and accompaniment) and modelling (polyphony). Under the influence of Weber and especially of Berlioz the orchestra became a marvellous palette, and gradually colour, by claiming for itself the whole interest, has put into the background first drawing and then modelling. For it is impossible to call by the name of polyphony the licentious cacophony of parts in certain modern scores. On the stage the human voice, formerly the undisputed mistress, has been reduced to a slave through the irritating abuse which she made of her powers. The outcome of this state of things is the denying of all rules which have been evolved in the course of time, and the shaking of the very foundations on which the whole musical structure has been erected during the last four centuries. Truly, an anarchical state of affairs! Yet it does not seem to strike people as objectionable; aye, surprise is not even expressed when the other arts, and even literature are seen to pass through similar crises. We have here to do with a general phenomenon, which must doubtless be attributed to causes from which there is no escape. In other forms we are returning to the stone lace traceries, to the key-stones which seem to crush the arch rather than strengthen it, and to the imbecility of 'leaning' towers. Unless the lessons of the past deceive us, a reaction is near at hand. What will it be? Nobody can tell; yet we can but hope that a mighty genius may arise, who, out of the present chaos, will evolve a state of order in which the vox humana—that living, god-inspired instrument—will regain the place which is its due, and line, modelling and colour will unite in perfect equipoise; where the tonalities, instead of dancing in a senseless and purposeless round, will assist each other, like the various pawns in a well-ordered game of chess. A grand future doubtless lies yet before music, that modern art kal' exochen, that Phoenix which cannot die.

We read in several continental musical contemporaries that 'according to information received from Jerusalem a new "Hymn to the Palæologoi" has been discovered in a valuable musical MS. in the Bibliotheca Hierosolymitana. It was written in one of the monasteries on Mount Athos (promontory of Chalkis or Salonika) in the year 1140. The hymn refers therefore in all probability to Emperor John Palæologos, the brother and predecessor of Constantine, the last of the Greek Emperors. It has not yet been definitely ascertained whether this hymn differs from that which was discovered by D. Kamburoglus amongst the MSS. in the Athens National Library, and which refers to Constantine Palæologos. In addition to the hymn, the Jerusalem MS. contains several "Royal Table-songs." We express no opinion on the accuracy, or the reverse, of these statements; no doubt more authentic details will soon be forthcoming.

The fiftieth anniversary of Schumann's death was commemorated at the quarterly Court dinner of the Musicians' Company, held on July 10, when a programme of the master's music was performed. The chief feature was the lovely Andante and Variations in B flat for two pianofortes, most beautifully interpreted by Mrs. Cooper, wife of the Master of the Company, and Mr. Otto Goldschmidt. This charming product of Schumann's genius was first performed, from manuscript, at a concert given by Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia—who is still living—at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, on August 19, 1843. On that occasion the performers of the duet were Clara Schumann and Felix Mendelssohn, and the event received further distinction in that Joseph Joachim, then a boy twelve years old, made his first appearance in Leipzig. The concert is thus summarized in Alfred Dörfel's invaluable 'Geschichte der Gewandhaus-concerte zu Leipzig' (1884):

1843. 19 Aug. Musikalische Soirée von Madame Pauline Viardot-Garcia.

Concertgeberin sang Arie aus 'Ines de Castro' von Persiani, Arie aus 'Rinaldo' von Händel, Rondo Finale aus 'La cenerentola' von Rossini, Arie von C. de Beriot, sowie französische, spanische und deutsche Romanzen.

Clara Schumann spielte eine Sonate von Beethoven und mit Mendelssohn Andante und Variationen für zwei Flügel von Robert Schumann (Manuscript); der 12 jährige Joseph Joachim trug, begleitet von Mendelssohn, Rondo für Violine von C. de Beriot vor.

Two mishaps attended this concert. Just at the beginning of the De Beriot Rondo, Joachim's E string broke, and he had scarcely repaired the string and recommenced his solo when an alarm of fire was raised and the audience rushed from the room in a state of alarm, happily unattended with danger, as the conflagration was confined to a haystack in the neighbourhood.

The Munich Neueste Nachrichten recently published an account of a journey to Munich undertaken just one hundred years ago by some young noblemen who travelled with the set purpose of 'seeing Napoleon,' who was then staying in the capital of Bavaria and had just elevated the country to the rank of a kingdom. During their stay the young gentlemen visited the Lutheran Court church and were present at an organ concert—or recital, in present day parlance—given by the famous Abbé Vogler. They wrote:

He performed, with the art and power which are quite his own, on the excellent and newly acquired organ which has been built according to his own system. Consequently the applause was general, even the members of the Court who were present, joining.

The programme of the recital is, however, the most interesting part of the account, and may be commended to the notice of Professor Niecks in his work on 'Programme Music' now in the press. Here it is:

1. March.
2. Cantabile, with the accompaniment of the harmonika.
3. Terrace song of the Africans, while they dress their flat roofs with lime, during which alternatively one choir sings and the other stamps.
4. The shepherds' delight, interrupted by a thunder-storm.

II.

1. Flute-Concert: Allegro, Andante, Rondo.
2. Song of the Hottentots, consisting of 3 bars and 2 words: Mayema, Mayema; Huh, Huh, Huh.
3. The Siege of Jericho:
  - a. Israel's prayer to Jehovah.
  - b. Trumpet fanfare.
  - c. Collapse of the walls.
  - d. Entry of the victors.

The notices of the Handel Festival which appeared in various London newspapers produced a curious crop of terminological inexactitudes. The omission of the initial word in references to the chorus 'Then round about the starry throne' is rather suggestive of a village fair, and 'Even round about the starry throne' is a little lacking in straightforwardness. We read of 'the smoothness of the divisions in "For unto you,"' and that on the Judas Maccabeus day were sung 'Mourn for afflicted children' and 'On, on, ye brave.' 'Oh! had I Tubal's lyre' comes within the range of capital punishment, and the designation of the conductor throughout the whole of one notice as Sir F. Cowen, was a little wide of the truth. Among other personal references we are told of 'Mr. Charles Saunders's easy and spirited delivery of "The trumpet shall sound" in the Israel selection—Mr. Saunders being, as everyone knows, a tenor vocalist and Israel having no trumpet references. But this double-barrelled misinformation is of pop-gun significance compared with the startling report that 'Mr. Santley has now appeared at every one of these festivals since 1841.'! Is it possible that the eminent baritone first sang at a Handel Festival when he was only seven years old, and, moreover, sixteen years before the first of these gigantic music-makings was held?

Hats, or no hats? This momentous question, raised in connection with the elevated headgears worn by the ladies of the Handel Festival chorus, was a far too delicate one to be answered by the executive. But what happened at the Handel Festival of 1790, held in Westminster Abbey? A fiat—of a fie-hat nature—went forth in these words:

No Ladies will be admitted with Hats, and they are particularly requested to come without Feathers, and very small Hoops, if any.

There was no option in regard to hats; but the 'particularly requested' shows the importance which the fair sex of those days attached to their feathers and hoops.

In the latest instalment of his voluminous 'Life of Wagner,' Mr. Ashton Ellis shows a curious lack of knowledge in regard to the re-numbering of London houses, one that involves considerable risk in stating that this or that house is where so-and-so lived or died. He says, with childlike simplicity (vol. v., p. 121, note 1):

Unless the numbers have been changed—which does not seem likely—No. 31 still exists, but in a dingy, uninviting condition.

The reference is to Balcombe Street, formerly Milton Street, on the north of Marylebone Road, where Ferdinand Praeger lived in 1855 and under whose roof Wagner passed the first night of his eventful visit to London in that year. As a matter of fact the number of that house has been altered: it is now No 65.

In the above connection a curious incident may be related. A certain writer on musical subjects who had interested himself in the musical haunts of London, heard that Madame Wagner had asked a London friend to have photographs taken of all the houses at which the master had stayed during his three visits to London—in 1838, 1855 and 1877, a request that was willingly complied with. Duplicates of these were retained in London, and were shown a few years after, by a near relative of Wagner's London friend, to the writer above referred to. The photograph in question was handed to him with the remark: 'This was Praeger's house, at which Wagner stayed.' 'I think not,' was the reply. 'Oh! but it is No. 31, Milton Street.' 'True, but the numbers have been changed, and the house that was numbered 31 in 1855 is now numbered 65.' This information came almost as a shock, with the result that a new photograph was taken of the actual house and sent to Madame Wagner at Bayreuth.

Protests are made from time to time against the length of concert programmes and not altogether without just cause. But what shall be said in regard to a concert at which eight long choral works are announced to be performed on one evening? Here is the information taken from a London weekly newspaper of long standing:

'The Kingdom,' the new composition by Sir Edward Elgar, to be produced at the Birmingham Festival, will be performed for the first time in London by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill, on November 17. The programme will also include Bach's Mass in B minor, Handel's 'Messiah,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and Gounod's 'Faust.'

Is that all, Mr. Gill?

SPOHR AND MENDELSSOHN AND THE NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The details of an interesting and little-known incident in the lives of Spohr and Mendelssohn were brought to light by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel in the columns of the New York Daily Tribune of October 29, 1905. It appears that the founder and first President of The Philharmonic Society of New York, Mr. Ureli Corelli Hill—an 'American, a descendant of the Pilgrim Fathers, with a drop of Danish blood in his veins'—was desirous of giving a Musical Festival in New York 'on European lines and to emulate Birmingham, Düsseldorf and other festival countries by engaging the greatest of living composers to direct the music.' The idea of this first Musical Festival in New York took shape at the end of 1844, when Mr. Hill invited first Spohr and then Mendelssohn to visit the New World, in the capacity of Festival conductors. Spohr answered as follows (translated from the original German):

HIGHLY RESPECTED SIR,—As honorable to me as your invitation to conduct the first American music festival is, my duties are unfortunately of a character to compel me to decline. You will know from the English journals that I was unable to get a furlough for the Norwich festival three years ago. Since then I have made many unpleasant experiences of the same character. Only a short time ago I had to decline another invitation from Norwich, a second one from Berlin, where my 'Fall of Babylon' was given for the first time, a third for the opening of a new music hall in Hamburg, and was only lucky enough to secure a week's furlough to conduct a music festival in Braunschweig, where my 'Fall of Babylon' was also performed. To visit America I should have to have a furlough of at least three months, and such I dare not ask. I must therefore forego the honor which you had planned for me, and I make haste to inform you of the fact since your letter was en route an incredibly long time, and did not reach my hands until the last days of the year which has just ended. If you should nevertheless still have a mind to perform my oratorio 'The Fall of Babylon,' you can get the score, pianoforte score and voice parts with English text from Professor Taylor (Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, London), for our German edition published by Breitkopf und Härtel, in Leipsic, has only German words.

If now you want to turn to Mendelssohn, know that he lives in Frankfort-on-the-Main, has severed his connections with Berlin, and will not be compelled, like me, to decline your invitation because of inability to get leave of absence. Have the goodness to greet my daughter and her family most heartily, and say to her that my new opera was received with an enthusiasm wholly unheard of in Cassel on New Year's Day, and will be repeated within a few days. We shall soon write to her and report our musical doings during the winter. In the home of her sister and in our own all is well. Greatly did we rejoice at the intelligence that you are contemplating another visit to Europe and that we may hope to see you here. Farewell and keep in friendly recollection your devoted

LOUIS SPOHR.

Cassel, January 4, 1845.

It would seem as if the letter conveying the above invitation had been entrusted to someone in Germany to whom Spohr should reply, and that this 'someone' had with him in reserve a similar communication for Mendelssohn, in case the former composer should be unable to visit New York. At all events the dates of the two letters seem to justify that surmise. Here is Mendelssohn's reply, set forth in his own faultless English:

DEAR SIR,—I beg to return my best and most sincere thanks for your letter. Indeed, I may say that I felt truly proud in receiving so kind and so highly flattering an invitation, and the offer itself, as well as the friendly words in which you couched it, will always continue a source of pride and true gratification for which I shall feel sincerely indebted to you.

But it is not in my power to accept that invitation, although I am sure it would have been the greatest treat to me if I could have done so. My health has seriously suffered during the last year, and a journey like that to your country, which I would have been most happy to undertake some three or four years ago, is at present beyond my reach. Even the shorter trips which I used to make to England or the South of Germany have become too fatiguing to me, and it will require a few years' perfect rest before I shall again be able to undertake the direction of a musical festival even in my own country. I need not tell you how much I regret to find it utterly impossible to come and to thank you in person for all the kindness and friendship which your letter contains.

Accept, then, my written thanks, which are certainly not less sincere and heartfelt, and pray let the committee know with how great a gratification and how thankfully I heard of their kind intentions toward me, and how deeply I regret not to be able to avail myself of so much kindness. Should you ever visit Europe and my country again, I hope you will not forget me and give me an opportunity of renewing your acquaintance and of expressing to you once more how deeply I feel indebted to you. I shall always remain, dear sir, yours most truly,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

Frankfort, January 20, 1845.

From 'The Philharmonic Society of New York,' an interesting 'memorial' written by Mr. H. E. Krehbiel in 1892 to commemorate its jubilee, we learn that Spohr, Mendelssohn, Wagner and Liszt were all elected honorary members of the Society. Spohr's letter of acceptance of the honour has been lost, but Mendelssohn's has been preserved through a lithographic facsimile of the original. It reads thus (not translated):

DEAR SIR,—I write these lines to express my best and most sincere thanks for the honor which the Philharmonic Society of New York has conferred upon me by electing me an Honorary Member, and I may truly say that I feel proud in being thus associated with a Society which has done so much for the progress of art in that part of the world. Pray express my feelings of true gratitude to the members of the Society, and inform them that I know how to appreciate the honor they have done me and the kindness to which I am indebted for it. Believe me that I sincerely wish to be able to visit some day your country, and thank you and your countrymen in person, instead of writing letters; but I fear my health will not allow me to think of so long a journey, and so I hope for a time when you may again be induced to visit our part of the world, and that I may then have an opportunity of repeating to you how thankful I feel to you and to the Philharmonic Society, and that these feelings will continue as long as I live.

I am, dear sir,

Your obed't serv't,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

Leipsic, August 11, 1846.

The letters of Wagner and Liszt may also be given, though in a translated form:

RESPECTED SIR,—In thanking you for communicating to me intelligence of the honor which has been conferred upon me in New York, I beg of you to inform the respected Philharmonic Society of New York how highly I appreciate the distinction with which it has endowed me. I look upon it as a beautiful reward of my efforts in behalf of art, to have won friends in the new and, for me unfortunately, strange world whose sympathy has reared me a sort of spiritual home. In sending to these friends a greeting of gratitude, I subscribe myself to you, and the Philharmonic Society,

Respectfully and devotedly,

RICHARD WAGNER.

Bayreuth, April 4, 1873.

HIGHLY RESPECTED SIR,—With sincere appreciation I reply to the honorable distinction represented by the diploma of the Philharmonic Society of New York. This diploma is rendered especially valuable to me by the words expressive of the motive which prompted it, viz.: "by his many compositions has extended the boundaries of his art, etc.," and their consonance with the acts of the Philharmonic Society in performing many of my works.

Begging you to communicate to the President, Directors, and Conductor of the Society my most obedient thanks, I am, with much respect,

Yours,

F. LISZT.

Weimar,

September, 5, 1873.

In connection with the University Extension Summer Meeting at Cambridge, a special performance of Handel's 'Messiah' will be given on August 14, under the direction of Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College. The chorus will consist of twenty-four picked voices, and the instrumentalists are to be thirty-three in number with pianoforte and organ. In the words of the announcement of this interesting performance, 'an attempt will be made to reproduce the oratorio with the same number of voices and instruments as Handel had when the work was performed under his own order and direction.'

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'ST. PETER.'

No hymnal would be considered complete that did not include Reinagle's melodious common metre tune 'St. Peter.' Like other hymn-tunes that have become favourites this simple and devotional strain made its entry into the world in a very humble manner, and, as in similar instances—e.g., 'Miles's Lane,' 'Wareham,' 'Bedford' and 'Rockingham'—it is the only production by which its composer is known and his name carried down to posterity.

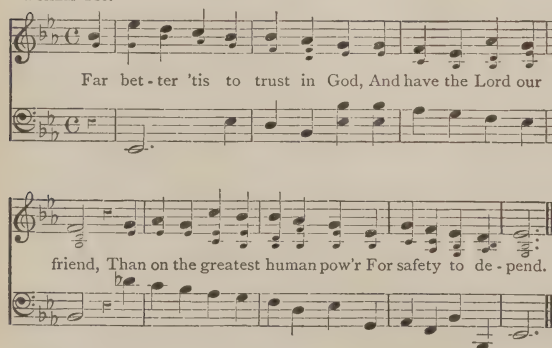

'St. Peter' made its first appearance in a small book of twenty-three pages and containing twenty-three tunes, entitled :

PSALM TUNES | for the | Voice & Piano Forte, |
composed by | A. R. REINAGLE, | of Oxford.
London, | Printed for the Author by T.
Holloway, Music Publisher, | 5, Hanway Street,
Oxford Street.

Price to Subscribers 3/-
Do. to Non. Do. 4/- in which the familiar tune, there un-named, appears in the following form :

PSALM 118.

Far bet-ter 'tis to trust in God, And have the Lord our friend, Than on the greatest human pow'r For safety to de-pend.

The book is undated, but c. 1830 is usually given as an approximate date of publication, doubtless on the authority of the British Museum catalogue. But Mr. William Cowan, of Edinburgh, informs us that in the latest supplement to the collection entitled 'Scottish Psalmody,' the year '1826' is given; and as this book appeared during Reinagle's lifetime this date, either of composition or publication, may have been obtained from him when his permission for the use of the tune was applied for. The above title is taken from the British Museum copy of the work, but it is quite possible that the book was originally published at Oxford, as was the book about to be referred to.

In 1840, Reinagle issued a second book of tunes, &c., entitled :

A COLLECTION OF | PSALM & HYMN TUNES, |
Chants, and other Music, | as sung in the Parish Church of St. Peter's in the East, Oxford
Arranged for the | Organ or Piano Forte, | by
A. R. REINAGLE.

Oxford: printed for the Editor, 55, Holywell-
Street. 1840.

Ent. Sta. Hall.

Price 15s.

In this collection the tune is named 'St. Peter,' and appears in practically the same form as that given above except that at the end of line 2 (of words) he introduces this ornament :

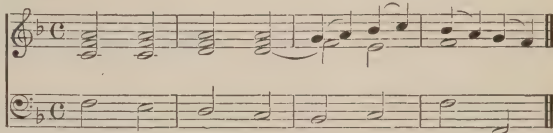

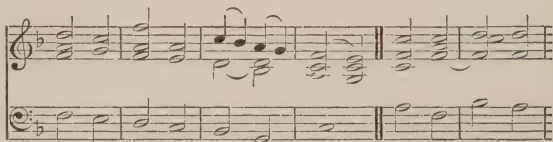

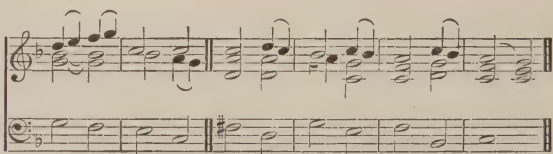

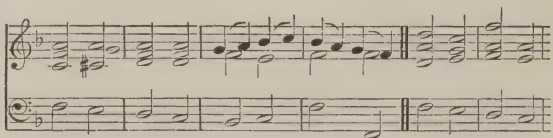

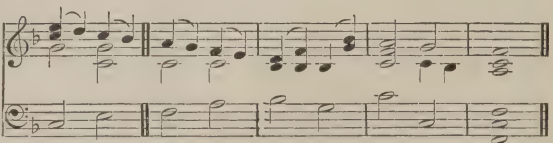

This second book (139 pages), dedicated to the Bishops of Oxford and Salisbury, contains some Gregorian and Anglican chants, also Samuel Wesley's Gavotte arranged as a hymn-tune! Here it is :

WESLEY.

P.M.

By S. WESLEY, A.D. 1800.

As to how closely Mr. Reinagle followed Wesley's original, the reader may judge for himself by comparing the above adaptation with the third piece in No. 12 of 'Old English Organ Music,' edited by Mr. John E. West.

The composer of 'St. Peter,' Alexander Robert Reinagle, was born at Brighton, August 21, 1799, where, it may be assumed, his parents were temporarily residing. His father, Joseph Reinagle (1762-1836), the son of Austrian parents, was a noted violoncellist in his day. He played in Salomon's orchestra in London under Haydn's conductorship, and we are told that 'he then had the honour of enjoying Haydn's intimate acquaintance and friendship, and received many serviceable hints on composition from that great master.' After living at Edinburgh—where he was well-known for his fine violoncello playing—and Dublin, Joseph Reinagle settled at Oxford. At that centre of culture was played, on July 4, 1798, a 'Battle Piece'—peace following the battle—composed by Joseph Reinagle. The 'programme' of this composition was thus set forth :

BATTLE PIECE, composed by Mr. Reinagle, in the following order :

- 1st. GRAND MARCH.
- 2nd. Word of Command.
- 3rd. First Signal Cannon.
- 4th. The Bugle Horn Call for the Cavalry.
- 5th. Answer to the first Signal Cannon.
- 6th. Trumpet Call for the Cavalry.
- 7th. Galloping of the Cavalry.
- 8th. Recitative accompanied : 'Are the troops drawn up?' Answer : 'They are, according to your orders.' 'The Cannons, are they pointed?' Answer : 'Each man impatient stands by his gun.' 'Then tell each Leader to advance.—Make ready !—Present !—Fire !'
- 9th. The Grand Attack.
- 10th. The Cries of the Wounded.
- 11th. The Bugle Horn Call for the Infantry.
- 12th. Trumpet of Victory.
- 13th. The Retreat.
- 14th. TRIO.—'The Sword that is drawn in Virtue's cause.'

To conclude with the MARCH in Blue Beard.

To return to Alexander Robert Reinagle. He was doubtless musically educated by his father, with what result, regarded from the point of view of artistic propriety, may be judged by the following extract from a concert programme :

Sonata, Pianoforte—Master Reinagle . . . Beethoven.

(In which will be introduced a favourite Air, with Harp Variations, accompanied on the Violoncello by Mr. REINAGLE.)

The italics are in the original programme, which is that of a concert given at Oxford on May 13, 1816, when Master Reinagle was a boy of sixteen.

In course of time he became organist of the church of St. Peter-in-East, Oxford, hence the name of the tune : this appointment he held from 1822 to 1853. (In the churchyard of St. Peter's Dr. William Hayes is buried.) Reinagle passed the latter years of his life at Kidlington, near Oxford, where he died on April 6, 1877. He is buried in the churchyard there, but his wife's remains were cremated at Woking. The inscription on the tombstone—kindly copied by the vicar of Kidlington, the Rev. A. C. R. Freeborn, specially for these notes—reads :

ALEXANDER ROBERT REINAGLE

aged 77 years

also

CAROLINE REINAGLE

died March 11, 1892.

aged 74 years

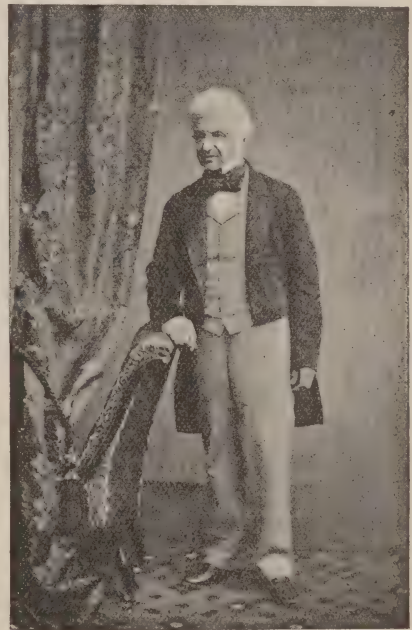

"Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Mr. Freeborn writes : 'There are several people here who knew Mr. Reinagle : he was of a cheery and humorous disposition up to the end of his life.'

The accompanying portrait of Mr. Reinagle is lent by Lady Stainer, who knew him well and who has kindly supplied the following reminiscences of her old music-master. Lady Stainer writes :

To begin at the beginning, Mr. Reinagle was one of the kindest friends of my childhood ; he not only taught me the pianoforte, but was an intimate friend of my parents. When I first remember him he lived with his step-mother in Holywell Street. He was very fond of me and used to write out easy settings of Handel's choruses and other things for me to play, and some accompaniments to songs which my father used to sing. I still possess a book of these MSS.

He married Miss Caroline Orger, a good musician and a composer, the only daughter of a Dr. Orger, of Brighton, and Mrs. Orger, a well-known actress in her day. Miss Orger was a good pianist and a friend of Miss Dolby, the singer, afterwards Madame Sainton-Dolby. The first concert I ever went to in London was one given by them at the Hanover Square Rooms just before Mr. Reinagle was married, and we had one of the three boxes at the end of the room. After their marriage I was constantly at their house in Holywell, and Mrs. Reinagle became my music mistress. Mr. Reinagle played and taught the violin, and used to lead the orchestra of the Union Amateur Society, when Dr. Stephen Elvey conducted it. He was short in stature and had thick white hair ; was deliberate in his movements, quaint in conversation, and a most kind-hearted man.

ALEXANDER ROBERT REINAGLE.
(From a photograph kindly lent by Lady Stainer.)

To the above interesting account must be added that Reinagle taught Sir John Stainer the violin ; also that Mrs. Reinagle, who died at Tiverton, wrote a pamphlet on 'A few words on pianoforte playing, with rules for fingering passages of frequent occurrence,' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, June and August, 1862. Her compositions included a pianoforte concerto, a pianoforte trio, two pianoforte quartets, a sonata in G for pianoforte and violoncello, a pianoforte sonata and other works for the instrument, three songs (words by Browning), &c. In conclusion, the tune 'St. Peter' seems to have been revived in the first edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' issued in 1861, whence it naturally found its way into other hymnals, how many it would be rash to say.

THE REPORT OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON ECCLESIASTICAL DISCIPLINE.

The above Report, recently issued in a Blue Book which is likely to become historical, contains only a brief reference to church music. This appears under the heading 'Departures from the standard of the Acts of Uniformity,' and is as follows :

It is right that we [the Commissioners] should observe that, ever since the time of the Reformation, the Crown has exercised a power of dealing with the services of the Church, with the result of a departure from a rigid adherence to the standard prescribed by the Acts of Uniformity. Thus, in the case of hymns, the Prayer Books of Edward VI. and Elizabeth, departing from the example of the Breviary, restricted the use of hymns in the public services to the very few (e.g., canticles at Morning and Evening Prayer), which form a fixed part of the several services. Nevertheless, the Queen's Injunctions (1559) purported to permit hymns to be sung congregationally at the beginning and end of Morning and Evening Prayer; and metrical psalters were published in various versions and editions, under royal authority, to be used in churches, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; with the result that, while in the present Prayer Book the only rubrical direction for an "anthem" is "in quires and places where they sing," after the third collect at Morning and Evening Prayer, metrical psalms and hymns have been habitually introduced at various parts of the services, the only condition—not always observed—being that no part of the Prayer Book form should be "let" or "omitted." Finally, hymns had the judicial sanction of Lord Stowell in 1792; and in the Lincoln Case (1890) Archbishop Benson held that the Agnus Dei, sung "in the Communion time" without interrupting the service, was allowable as a hymn. He said, "The singing in none of these places is permissible by the words of any statute or rubric; but no Court or authority would consent to declare it illegal, because the prevalent use of it is, by the principles of law, a very safe assurance that it is not illegal." The Judicial Committee in approving the Archbishop's judgment took the same view, and based their decision on "usage ever since the passing of the Act of Uniformity." The repetition of the words "Glory be to Thee, O Lord," before the Gospel, required by the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. but omitted from all subsequent Prayer Books, may similarly be justified by long usage. Yet the difficulty of this defence is illustrated by the Judicial Committee itself, when in another context it quotes with approval the dictum of Dr. Lushington that usage, though entitled to the greatest respect, "cannot contravene or prevail against positive law."

It is rather interesting to find in this Report the following, as one of the 'Non-significant breaches of the law' (the italics are ours) :

The making of a collection during Morning and Evening Prayer, there being no provision for this in the rubrics. This practice is common.

No one will question the accuracy of the last four words of this quotation.

Dr. W. B. Gilbert's well-known tune 'Maidstone'—originally composed to Montgomery's hymn 'Songs of praise the angels sang,' but now associated with Lyte's 'Pleasant are Thy courts above'—forms one of the extra supplements to our present issue. This favourite strain has found a hearty welcome in almost every hymnal of recent times; but it was excluded from the new edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' therefore those who use that book may be glad to know that the tune can now be obtained separately, Messrs. Novello having published it in their Parish Choir Book series.

'The Apostles' (Part II.) was sung at Lincoln's Inn Chapel on Sunday afternoon, July 15, under the direction of Mr. Reginald Steggall, organist and director of the choir.

JUBILEE FESTIVAL OF THE LICHFIELD DIOCESAN CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

The right note, jubilant and praiseful, resounded again and again in Lichfield Cathedral on June 27, at the festival held to commemorate the jubilee of the above Association. As Lichfield was the first to be formed of these diocesan organizations, the event had more than local interest. On this occasion twenty-seven choirs, numbering 800 voices, were united in an uplift of praise and thanksgiving at two services, matins and evensong. In addition to the usual chants and hymns, the service-music included Te Deum in D (Ouseley), Benedictus in D (Calkin)—both composed for the Association—Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (Prout), and Ouseley's anthem, dedicated to the Association, 'It came even to pass.' Mr. John E. West had composed specially for the occasion an anthem 'The Lord hath done great things for us,' an effective composition and one worthy of the occasion, which was sung at both services to the accompaniment of organ, brass instruments, and drums. Mr. John B. Lott, the Cathedral organist, conducted with that resourcefulness which comes from skilled musicianship and long experience, and Mr. H. B. Tupper, organist of Burton Parish Church, rendered efficient service at the organ in the regrettable absence, through illness, of Mr. H. Rose, assistant-organist of the cathedral. An eloquent sermon was preached by Canon Scott Holland. All who took part in this memorable service are to be warmly congratulated upon its success as an important commemorative event. The Mayor of Lichfield (Mr. D. Harrison), with the other members of the City Council, not only attended in state, but, as a member of the cathedral choir, his Worship took part in the service.

A choral festival of choirs (Evensong) was held in St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, on June 23, under the conductorship of Mr. T. H. Collinson, organist of the cathedral. The service was Heath in F, and the anthems were 'Praise the Lord' (Goss) and 'O love the Lord' (Sullivan). The united choirs at the festival service numbered 650 voices, representing thirty churches in the diocese of Edinburgh.

Reviews.

Life of Richard Wagner. By Wm. Ashton Ellis. Vol. V. [Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.]

The mere fact that this biography has already filled 2361 closely-printed pages gives it a claim to be called gigantic, and yet Mr. Ashton Ellis has still twenty-eight not uneventful years of Wagner's life to chronicle! The present instalment, up to the summer of 1855, is of special interest to English readers as, with the exception of forty pages devoted to the 'Faust' overture, the entire volume (460 pages) is occupied with the master's eventful visit to London (in 1855) as conductor of the Philharmonic Society's concerts. Not only does Mr. Ellis give a microscopical account of those distressful four months—only 100 pages per month—in Wagner's career, but he quotes column after column of London newspaper criticisms on Wagner during his sojourn in London. These quotations make this volume the most amusing of those hitherto issued; in reading them one wonders if a similar laugh will be turned against present-day critics by those who, fifty years hence, will read their critical delirerances. At all events no one can accuse Mr. J. W. Davison of having been a dull writer, for J. W. D.'s amusing onslaughts against 'the music of the future' are most entertaining in their readability, while the redoubtable musical critic of The Times had a no less formidable and mirth-provoking ally in Mr. H. F. Chorley, of the Athenæum: verily Vol. V. of the 'Life of Richard Wagner' furnishes an interesting study in English musical criticism.

Mr. Ashton Ellis fully sustains his reputation for industry and love of detail in this volume of his apparently exhaustive task. But are not his attacks on Ferdinand Praeger tinged with malice? As the poor man is dead, and therefore cannot reply to the charges made against him, it is only fair in the interests of accuracy, and as a warning to other biographers and historians of music, to take up the cudgels on Praeger's behalf, although he himself was not above reproach in regard to reliability. In his relentless pulverizing enthusiasm Mr. Ellis has, by inference, accused Praeger of deception; and this not on the foundation of fact, but on the thin ice of supposition, with the result that Wagner's biographer not only gets a ducking, but he will have to re-write pages 72 to 74 of his book. Without going into details, it may suffice to say that the English Gentleman of 1845-46 is at the British Museum (Newspaper Room), and that it has been on the shelves there for half-a-century! In the issue of November 15, 1845, p. 497, Mr. Ellis will find Praeger's letter describing the first performance of 'Tannhäuser,' upon the existence of which he (Mr. Ellis) casts 'the gravest suspicion': he will also find that it is signed 'From yours, F. P.' and that it is prefaced with an editorial endorsement: 'We have been favoured with the following extracts from a letter from Dresden.' Moreover, if Mr. Ellis had taken the ordinary precaution of consulting the issues of Mitchell's 'Newspaper Press Directory' for 1845 and 1846, he would have found that the English Gentleman was running its course in those years—No. 1 issued April 26, 1845—a discovery that should have led him to make further investigations before casting an imputation upon Praeger's veracity anent the production of Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' at Dresden in 1845. By the way, in the letter above referred to, 'Tannhäuser' is misprinted 'Tambhäuser'!

NEW ANTHEMS.

The Lord hath done great things for us. Composed by John E. West.

Hear, O My people. Composed by Joseph Holbrooke.

Cast me not away. Composed by C. Lee Williams.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. John E. West's anthem, 'The Lord hath done great things for us,' was composed by request for the Jubilee festival of the Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association, held on June 27. Laid out on broad lines and constructed on a diatonic basis, the part-writing is perfectly clear and eminently singable. In the concise first movement excellent use is made of vocal unison and unaccompanied phrases, and the music is well knit together in a pæan of praise. The next section, beginning 'Our help standeth in the name of the Lord,' is assigned to a semi-chorus for the first fifteen bars, when the full chorus interjects with unrestrained jubilation the opening vocal phrase of the anthem, this time in tones of strenuous unison. The last movement—more developed than those which precede it, but not over worked-out as too often happens—is cleverly designed in its contrasting elements. Here we find 'Tone III., 2nd ending,' given out by tenors and basses, answered by the Hallelujahs of the sopranos and altos; this and other commendable features go to make up a movement which worthily sets its seal on a first-rate festival anthem—one which should make its way by reason of musicianship and effective construction. The independent organ part is well laid out for the instrument, and Mr. West has written independent parts for cornets, trombones and drums, which may be used if desired, though these are not necessary to the rendering of an anthem which does credit to its composer.

Choirmasters in search of a festival anthem possessing distinction may be recommended 'Hear, O My people' composed by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke. Essentially modern in character, the harmonies in several instances are somewhat extreme for church use; a well-trained choir is also absolutely necessary, but the part-writing will interest good singers and, well-rehearsed, the anthem will be impressive. An Andante movement, laid out for quartet, provides an effective contrast to the dignity of the opening and the vigorous conclusion of the anthem.

'Cast me not away,' composed by Mr. C. Lee Williams, although specially applicable to Lent, is also appropriate for other seasons. The music is thoroughly devotional in character, smoothly written, and possesses that tranquil beauty that might well stir the souls of the listeners to prayer.

Les Symphonies de Beethoven.—By J.-G. Prod'homme.

[Paris: Librairie Ch. Delagrave.]

M. Edouard Colonne, the well-known conductor, has written a preface to this volume which 'by making known to us Beethoven enables us the better to understand him.' The nine Symphonies of the master are carefully analysed with copious musical examples—about which a word or two anon—together with long extracts from critical notices and various comments and historical details. The author in his preface alludes to biographies and other works on Beethoven and his music which have appeared in France, and remarks that hitherto an 'étude' on the nine Symphonies has been lacking in that country. He refers, of course, to the English work by the late Sir George Grove, 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies,' and, as the contents of his book show, he has made liberal use of it.

An appreciation of Beethoven's symphonic art-work on the plan of this new publication will of course attract the notice of young French students and lovers of music who wish 'to know and to understand,' just as here in England Sir George Grove's work was welcomed, and still remains the best book on the subject. A German edition, by-the-way, has just appeared: the translator is Max Hehemann.

Although there is much that is useful and interesting in M. Prod'homme's work, there are features in it which greatly detract from its value. Already on page 5 there is a statement which acts as a danger signal. It does not concern Beethoven, but Mozart. We there read that the latter did not use the clarinet in his Symphonies. That instrument certainly was not represented in the score of the Symphony in G minor as first written by Mozart, but he afterwards added parts for two clarinets. Again, on p. 41, we find a foot-note to the effect that the three famous letters thought to have been addressed to the Countess Guicciardi were, en réalité, written to Theresa of Brunswick. The matter is of some importance, as the supposed engagement between Beethoven and Theresa crops up again in the chapters on the fourth and fifth Symphonies; a foot-note, therefore, might surely have mentioned Dr. A. Kalischer's 'Die unsterbliche Geliebte,' in which the author stoutly maintains the 'Guicciardi' theory. From M. Prod'homme's book no reader would suspect that there was a shadow of suspicion attaching to Miriam Tenger's account of the matter. Other inaccuracies might be pointed out, but the most serious blemishes occur in the musical examples. In No. 11 of the first Symphony, by making the entry of the oboes three bars too soon, unutterable confusion is caused, while in the next example there are ties added which destroy the rhythm of the phrase. No. 3 of the 'Eroica' has a wrong clef in the lower stave. Then, once more, in the illustration from the bass recitative in the ninth Symphony a mistake at the end is noted among the errata, but one near the beginning has not been corrected. Passing from extracts from the Symphonies, let us notice (pp. 291-2) examples F, G, H, I from the sketches in Nottebohm's 'Zweite Beethoveniana.' There are mistakes in all; in the last eight simple bars of Ex. F there are no fewer than five! The errors we have pointed out are only specimens; the book literally swarms with them. The author after his small table of errata at the end of the book, adds 'Malgré plusieurs révisions, quelques fautes moins importantes se sont glissées dans les textes musicaux'!

Eastern Dance. Intermezzo. Arranged for the pianoforte from the music to 'Nero' by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Those who witnessed Mr. Tree's production of Stephen Phillips's drama 'Nero' will certainly have a lively recollection of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music which added no little to the effectiveness of the performance, and one of the most memorable numbers was the 'Eastern Dance' executed by Nautch girls at the gorgeous feast in Nero's palace. The composer is never happier than when he gives musical expression to any elemental emotion, and his Eastern dance is one of his most distinctive efforts. The Intermezzo is also a captivating number, typically characteristic of Eastern idiom and suggestive of dusky forms in citron groves. The pieces will not be found difficult to play, but their unconventional character must be realized by the executants. Equally effective arrangements of both the Eastern Dance and the Intermezzo have been made for violin and pianoforte.

Dreaming. A Reverie for violoncello (or violin) and pianoforte. By Noel Johnson.

Serenade. Spring Song. Dance in the Ancient style. For violin and pianoforte. By S. von Leer. [Charles Woolhouse.]

Mr. Noel Johnson always writes tastefully, and his 'Dreaming' is a pleasant reverie that steals on its way with harmonious footfall, the music suggesting the deepening shadows on a summer's evening. There is a strong family likeness amongst serenades, but that by M. von Leer possesses some distinction and has a hopeful air. The 'Spring Song' is a gladsome melody not without grace, and the 'Dance in the ancient style' is a good example of the minuet. All the above pieces are unpretentious and easy to play.

Obituary.

Full of years, like a shock of corn fully ripe, MANUEL GARCIA, aged 101 years, passed away in his sleep at his residence Mon Abri, Cricklewood, on July 1. Thus calmly and naturally ended a long, long life devoted to the art of music. As on the occasion of his centenary celebration last year we gave an illustrated biographical sketch of the venerable musician (MUSICAL TIMES, April, 1905), there is no need to repeat, in this simple record of his death, the details of his remarkable career. The remains of the eminent singing-master were quietly laid to rest on July 4, in a private burying ground attached to the Roman Catholic chapel of St. Edward's, Sutton Place, near Woking.

The death is recorded with regret of GEORGE MOUNT, on July 11, at 9, Cleveland Mansions, Highgate, aged eighty-two. Born at Canterbury on November 17, 1823, Mr. Mount became a student at the Royal Academy of Music in 1847, his professors being Sterndale Bennett (composition), F. B. Jewson (pianoforte), and James Howell (double-bass). As an excellent double-bass player he played for many years in the Opera and Philharmonic orchestras, in the latter under Wagner in 1855: he was also a member of Queen Victoria's private band. He became favourably known as an orchestral conductor, beginning with an amateur society at St. John's Wood (in 1866) and afterwards as conductor of the British Orchestral Society (1872), which he founded, and the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society (1871-1897). For the twenty-fifth anniversary of the latter organization Mr. Mount composed an Overture, performed at Queen's Hall, November, 1897. His other conducting experiences included the orchestras of the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, Alexandra Palace, and (occasionally, 1884-87) the Philharmonic Society.

MR. CHARLES DAVISON, senior member of the firm of Messrs. Gray & Davison, organ-builders, died suddenly at Cromer on July 8. For many years he had charge of the Liverpool branch of the business, and in 1889 took over the management of the London factory.

As supplementing the obituary notice of Mr. S. S. Stratton in our last issue we may quote from a letter he wrote us (April 9, 1901) in which he referred to the biography of Arthur Sullivan in 'British Musical Biography' compiled by him and Mr. James D. Brown. He said: 'You may, or may not, be aware that Sullivan played the bass drum in Broadwood's band about 1857-8, and that his first organ appointment was at Covent Garden Theatre, when, in 1863, he played in the church scene in "Faust." The same letter contains a reference to his (Mr. Stratton's) hobbies and industry: "Thanks for the date of Fred Sullivan's birthday: that makes seventeen on my list for Christmas Day, and I have seventeen for Boxing Day. Why are more musicians born from October to March, than from April to September? . . . I have ceased my laborious indexing of musical papers with the close of the century; it has taken all my spare time for twenty years.' Two papers that he read before the Musical Association furnish additional proof of his versatility and industry: (i.) 'On the Gymnastic Training of the Hand for Performing on Keyed Instruments' (May 7, 1877), and (ii.) 'Woman in Relation to Musical Art' (May 7, 1883). The last named included a long list—perhaps the longest that has been compiled—of lady composers.

The twelfth season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall is announced to extend from August 18 to October 26, under the conductorship, as heretofore, of Mr. Henry J. Wood. Of the twenty-three novelties which are to be performed, six are by native composers, as follows:

A NORFOLK RHAPSODIE	- - -	Vaughan Williams.
OVERTURE, In spring time (Op. 21)	- - -	Norman O'Neill.
PRELUDE, Sappho	- - -	Granville Bantock.
MUSIC POEM, Epithalamium	- - -	J. H. Foulds.
OVERTURE, In Memoriam	- - -	Geor. Halford.
ORCHESTRAL SUITE No. 6, Bohemian	- - -	Joseph Holbrooke.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

This triennial event took place with time-honoured success at the Crystal Palace on June 23, 26, 28 and 30. To the first day was assigned the full rehearsal at which the fine condition of the festival choir manifested itself, one of the best, if not the best, of all the choirs that have given distinction to the festival since its inauguration nearly half-a-century ago. On the second day the 'Messiah' was rendered with an impressiveness confirming the conviction that this oratorio is unapproachable in its divine supremacy. The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Santley, a quartet of experienced vocalists from whom much was expected and from whom much was received. The veteran baritone—who has appeared at all these festivals since 1865—received a very warm reception when he rose to sing the recitative 'For behold, darkness,' and his rendering of 'Why do the nations?' was charged with that artistic fervour which has distinguished the whole of his long career. It need only be said that Madame Albani invested her solos with devotional fervour; that Madame Ada Crossley in 'He was despised' touched the depths of feeling; and that Mr. Ben Davies interpreted the Passion music with pathetic tones which went to the hearts of his hearers. It should be stated, by way of record, that the recitative 'Thus saith the Lord' and the air which follows it were omitted, that the duet 'O death, where is thy sting?' was sung, and that 'Since by man came death' and the three succeeding numbers were rightly given to the choir and not sung as quartets.

The programme of the Selection Day is subjoined in full for future reference:

	* First time at a Handel Festival.

As 'Judas Maccabæus' displaced 'Israel in Egypt' on the third day, it was fitting that the latter oratorio should be well represented on the Selection day, for what would a Handel Festival be like without those colossal double-choruses from 'Israel' which thrill those who have ears to hear? The virile music again made itself felt: e.g. 'He rebuked the Red Sea' and the 'Hailstone,' the latter so magnificently sung that an encore was insisted upon. Was it necessary to spoil the eloquence of the silence in 'He rebuked the Red Sea' by the intrusion of organ chords? In these days of the higher education in music it surely ought to be possible for a Handel Festival choir to change from a major to a minor chord, or from the chord of E flat to the first inversion of the chord of G minor, without being prompted by the organ. This blemish on an otherwise commendable rendering of the chain of noble choruses should be removed at the next festival.

There is no need to enter into details concerning the manner in which the whole of the second part of the programme was interpreted. The orchestra embraced their full opportunity for refined and expressive playing in the charming Minuet from 'Berenice,' an opera which (according to Burney) 'in spite of its excellence, could not go beyond four representations.' It seems strange that the well-known 'Samson' chorus 'Then round about the starry throne' should not hitherto have been heard at a Handel Festival. The splendid singing of the choir in this short, imposing, and melodious chorus was beyond all praise, and fully justified its selection. Of the soloists Mr. Charles Saunders had to repeat 'The enemy said,' not that the audience (and the gentlemen of the choir) doubted anything the enemy did say, but that they wanted the full-voiced tenor to pursue the subject farther. Miss Agnes Nicholls, by her fine singing of the unaccompanied phrases in 'Israel in Egypt,' no less than in 'O had I Jubal's lyre,' again made her mark as an artist of the highest rank (though we did not like that top A), and Madame Ada Crossley sang 'Lord, to Thee each day and night' ('Theodora') most beautifully.

At the first (preliminary) festival held in 1857 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed in its entirety on the second day, when Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort, and our present King (then Prince of Wales) listened to Handel's martial oratorio, the concert terminating with the 100th Psalm sung, to the familiar strain, at the personal request of the Queen. A good precedent was thus set for appropriating one day of the recent festival to 'Judas,' a work which provides full scope for choir and soloists alike. The chief singers on June 30 were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Robert Radford, the mention of their names being sufficient to class them as of good report. True Handelian choruses glorify this oratorio, and they were grandly sung by the choir, who simply revelled in the pleasure-giving strains of the old master whose music they love so well.

Throughout the festival the orchestra gave proof of their efficiency, though the strings and wood-wind were ill-balanced against the stupendous volume of tone from the choir; and at times, through lack of numbers, the bass of the solo orchestra (the London Symphony Orchestra) was scarcely audible. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock rendered efficient service at the organ, and Dr. F. H. Cowen is to be very warmly congratulated upon the skill he again showed as conductor of the huge forces under his control. Not only did he keep band and chorus well in hand, but he infused the spirit of artistic feeling—expression, phrasing, and so on—into performances which made memorable the Handel Festival of 1906.

The Hereford Musical Festival is announced to be held on September 9, 11, 12, 13 and 14, under the conductorship of the cathedral organist, Dr. G. R. Sinclair. The following works will be performed for the first time and conducted by their respective composers: 'Lift up your hearts,' a sacred symphony in F (H. Walford Davies); 'The soul's ransom,' a psalm of the poor (C. H. H. Parry); and orchestral Suite No. 2 (Joseph Holbrooke); in addition to two songs composed by Mr. Ivor Atkins (of Worcester), and Three Elizabethan Pastorals, by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer (Gloucester). The festival programme includes Messiah, Mass in B minor (Bach), Elijah, Hymn of Praise, Te Deum (Berlioz), Dream of Gerontius and The Apostles.

BRITISH-CANADIAN FESTIVAL CONCERT.

QUEEN'S HALL, JUNE 27.

Programme :

Overture—'Britannia' .. .. .	A. C. Mackenzie.
'Irish Rhapsody' No. 2 (Op. 84) .. .. .	C. Villiers Stanford.
'Blest Pair of Sirens' .. .. .	C. H. H. Parry.
Overture—'The Butterfly's Ball' .. .. .	F. H. Cowen.
Choric Idyl 'Pan' .. .. .	C. A. E. Harriss.
Overture—'Cockaigne' .. .. .	E. Elgar.
'Canadian Rhapsody' (Op. 67) .. .. .	A. C. Mackenzie.

The presence of His Majesty the King gave the highest distinction it was possible to give to this important concert: moreover, the works selected for performance not only typified what is best in British music, but with one exception they were conducted by their respective composers. Dr. Charles Harriss, of Ottawa, who had organized this enjoyable music-making, secured the invaluable co-operation of the London Symphony Orchestra and a capital chorus of 250 voices, in addition to a quartet of excellent solo vocalists in the persons of Mlle. Pauline Donalda (by permission of the Grand Opera Syndicate), Miss Ida Kahn, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

The orchestral works are so well known and were so admirably played as to need no detailed criticism, excepting to say that they were all warmly received, and that in the unavoidable absence of Sir Edward Elgar (through an accident to his knee), the 'Cockaigne' overture was conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who discharged a similar duty when the National Anthem was played upon the King's arrival and departure. Sir Hubert Parry received a specially hearty welcome, even a boisterous reception, by the choir, when he came forward to conduct his 'Blest pair of Sirens,' a work that grows in interest and importance upon each re-hearing of its Miltonic strains.

The novelty of the evening was the first performance in England of the Choric Idyl 'Pan,' the words by Josephine Preston Peabody, the music by Dr. Charles A. E. Harriss, Director of the McGill Conservatorium of Music, Montreal, and a former Tenbury chorister. This melodious work was composed for the Farewell State Concert given at Ottawa in honour of the Earl and Countess of Minto, on the night previous to the Viceregal departure from the capital, October, 1904. In the words of the analytical programme, 'the music of "Pan" is imaginative, picturesque, and atmospheric, rather than dramatic. Its musical expression is continuous, and it is in more than one way an interesting essay in what may be termed the symphonic style of choral composition.' The interpretation of the work proved the correctness of this judgment; the music steers clear of psychological perplexities and metaphysical mystification, with the result that it gives pleasure by its melodic flow and cheerful atmosphere. Mlle. Donalda rendered the music assigned to Syrinx with all due impressiveness, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, in the rôle of Pan, excelled himself. A word of praise is due to Miss Ida Kahn for her singing in the subordinate part of Echo, and Mr. John Harrison in the tenor solos sang splendidly. The work was very warmly received, and Dr. Harriss must have been highly gratified by the success attending his efforts, here and in Britain-beyond-the-Seas, in the cause of British-Canadian music.

VIENNA PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The visit to London of the orchestra of the above-named Society in June was one of no small interest. Many foreign conductors come to London, while a few seasons ago French orchestras appeared at Mr. Robert Newman's festivals, a Dutch orchestra at the 'Strauss' festival of 1903, and still more recently the orchestra from the Ostend Kursaal at the Belgian festival, but this is the first time that the famous orchestra formerly associated with Dr. Richter has visited us.

The Viennese band enjoys a great reputation, and of this it proved worthy. In the matter of orchestral playing and of conducting, the London public has had great experience, and at the first of the concerts in question—at Queen's Hall on June 28—the audience soon perceived that the band was an excellent one, and Herr Schalk an able and enthusiastic conductor. There was some fine playing in Mozart's G minor Symphony, and seeing that there were 117 members in the band, the soft passages were rendered with remarkable delicacy. But what would Mozart have said to such an orchestra? The impetuous performance of Weber's 'Oberon' overture may be named the high-water mark of the evening. It was a graceful compliment to British art to include Sir Edward Elgar's 'Orchestral Variations,' which were given with marked, at times indeed overmarked, refinement, but a work by an Austrian composer by way of novelty would perhaps have been wise. At the second concert—Queen's Hall, June 28—a vivid performance was given of Beethoven's 'Leonore' Overture No. 3. The third concert took place in the Albert Hall on June 30, and was honoured by the presence of the King. If the performances were less impressive than at the two previous concerts, this was owing to the hall, which was not well suited to the Tchaikovsky 'Pathétique' and the other works performed.

THE OPERA.

"EUGÈNE ONÉGHIN."

Two interesting revivals have taken place at Covent Garden since our last notice. On June 22 Tchaikovsky's three-act opera 'Eugène Onéghin' was mounted and sung in Italian, with a cast which placed the work in a most favourable light. It may be mentioned that the opera was suggested by the celebrated singer Madame E. A. Lavrovsky, the libretto being prepared by the composer and K. S. Shilovsky from the novel in verse of the same name by Poushkin. Composed during 1877-78, 'Eugène Onéghin' was first performed March 29, 1879, by the students of the Moscow Conservatoire. After having been played in several Continental cities, it was first performed in England at the Olympic Theatre on October 17, 1892. The character of the heroine Tatiana, an ingenuous minded girl of romantic disposition, greatly appealed to Tchaikovsky, and his letters show that he took great interest in his work. It is not, however, until the last act of the opera, in the impassioned scene between Onéghin and Tatiana, that Tchaikovsky would seem to have been stirred to write real dramatic music. The chorus of peasants and their dances in the first scene are typically Russian, and the whole of the ball-room music is captivating. Mlle. Destinn as Tatiana and Madame Kirkby Lunn as Olga did all that was possible to excite interest in the sisters; Signor Battistini was excellent as Onéghin; M. Alchevsky sang the music of Lensky with due fervour; and other parts were efficiently sustained by Mlle. Grimm, MM. Journet, Artus and Crabbé. Signor Campanini conducted, and the mounting and ensemble were excellent. The performance was repeated on July 5 and 10 with the same cast.

GLUCK'S 'ARMIDE.'

Considering the prominent position held by Gluck in the history of operatic art, it is remarkable that the work in which are embodied his greatest reforms should not have been performed in England until July 6, particularly when it is remembered that the opera was produced on September 23, 1777, at the Académie Royale, Paris. The credit however is all the greater to the Covent Garden Syndicate, especially as the work is a costly one to mount adequately, and no expense was spared. Several of the best artists of the company were engaged, and a beautiful series of new scenes was painted by Mr. Harry Brooke. The result was to present the opera with probably greater completeness than ever dreamed of by the composer, and so favourably to impress the present generation with the genius of the old Master that it has been decided to place the work in the Covent Garden repertoire. From an artistic point of view this is highly satisfactory, for it cannot fail to persuade many doubters of the importance of old music, and the best numbers possess a dignity and commanding repose valuable as an antidote to the feverish tendency of modern music.

It is certainly curious that for his supreme effort Gluck should have selected a libretto by Quinault which had been used by another composer ninety-one years earlier; but probably Gluck, although far in advance of the musical ideas of his time, had not realised the importance of operatic libretti, and had unlimited belief in the power of his music to invest any subject with interest. Moreover, it must be admitted that the story of 'Armide' presents a series of emotional conflicts which are as the breath of life to operatic composers.

The character of Armide was very finely embodied by Mlle. Bréval, specially engaged from the Paris Opera House, and the intensity of her acting and singing greatly contributed to the success of the performance. Madame Kirkby Lunn's impersonation of Hate was also memorable. M. Laffitte, although somewhat short of stature as an exponent of the redoubtable knight, Rinaldo, sang the heroic music of his part with true perception of its nature, and the other characters were admirably sustained by Mesdames Gilibert-Lejeune, Gleeson-White and Das, and MM. Crabbé, Altchevsky, Dognies and Artus. The dances were beautifully executed by the corps de ballet from the Brussels Opera House, and the ensemble attested to the skill of M. Mésager, who conducted a capital performance.

'Traviata' was mounted on July 7, with Madame Melba and Signor Caruso in the principal parts; 'Aida' on July 14, with Mlle. Destinn, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Signori Caruso and Battistini and M. Journet; and an exceptionally fine performance of 'Don Giovanni' took place on July 17, the cast consisting of Mesdames Destinn, Agnes Nicholls and Donalda, Signori Caruso and Battistini, and MM. Journet, Gilibert and Marcoux.

JOHN BARNETT'S 'THE MOUNTAIN SYLPH.'

A touch of antiquarian interest was imparted to the performance of the students of the operatic class of the Guildhall School of Music on July 5, in that the work selected was 'The mountain sylph' composed by John Barnett. The opera was produced on August 25, 1834, at the English Opera House (Lyceum Theatre); it proved so greatly to the taste of the period that it ran 100 nights, and was regarded by Sir George Macfarren as an epoch-marking work in the history of English Opera. In general character, however, 'The mountain sylph' belongs to the same order as Weber's 'Der Freischütz,' the libretto being much concerned with supernatural doings, and the music being impregnated with the romantically heroic.

Much of the music is as naïve as the text, but melodic grace is seldom absent, and the phrases are always well laid out for the voice. The songs for Æolia are tender and suave, and the Wizard has two excellent solos. Much skill is shown in the ensemble writing, and the Finale to the first Act shows keen dramatic perception. The performance, under the direction of Mr. Richard H. Walthew, reflected great credit on all concerned. Two interpretations were given, thus enabling some of the characters to be played by different students. Thus the name part was sustained by Miss Enid Cummings and Miss Emmerline M. Coffin, both of whom sang and acted with skill and intelligence. Jessie was impersonated by Miss Barwell-Holbrook and Miss Frances M. Langton, both young people showing promise. Mr. E. Lewis appeared as Donald, and exceptional vocal skill and histrionic ability were shown by Mr. E. R. Carr as Hela, the Wizard. Minor characters were efficiently sustained by Miss Lillian J. Smith, and Messrs. W. L. Solique, C. Pope, E. J. Davies, and R. Moore. Honourable mention is also due of the sprightly dancers trained by Mr. B. Soutten.

The Musical Association of Kimberley, South Africa, gave the first concert of their sixth season on June 7. A popular programme was presented, including Mozart's 'Figaro' overture, the last movement of a Haydn Symphony in B flat, Charles Hoby's orchestral suite 'Childhood,' the part-songs 'In this hour' (Pinsuti) and 'Hunting song' (Benedict), in addition to Smieton's cantata 'Ariadne.' Mr. J. Frank Proudman conducted.

London Concerts.

M. SAINT-SAËNS.

Special interest attended the recital given by M. Hollman, the violoncellist, at Bechstein Hall on July 12, in that the programme consisted entirely of music by M. Saint-Saëns, and that the eminent French composer actively participated in the interpretation thereof. Moreover, a new sonata for pianoforte and violoncello (in F, Op. 125), by M. Saint-Saëns, was performed for the first time in England. A product of the winter of 1904, the sonata shows that the hand which penned it has lost none of its cunning. This is especially demonstrated in the Scherzo with a set of variations on the opening theme, a movement full of poetic grace and unbroken charm. M. Hollman performed the violoncello part with all resourcefulness, and the pianoforte part was most beautifully played by the composer—touch, technique and phrasing being faultless. This pleasure-giving pianoforte-playing by a man seventy years of age was not only remarkable for its unalloyed beauty, but furnished a welcome contrast to the noisy poundings of young and unrestrained virtuosi.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

Much excellent music was heard at the sixth Royal College of Music Patron's Fund concert held on July 3 at Queen's Hall. The concert opened with an overture entitled 'When the heart is young,' by Mr. Cecil Hazlehurst, who has studied privately in England and abroad. The title is merely indicative of the general character of the music, which is full of young life and energy, with the exception of a central episode in which the young spirit would seem to have a glimpse of the thread of tragedy which runs through life; but this is as a passing cloud on a summer day, and serves to intensify the general brightness and humour of an engaging work, one that testifies to a lively imagination and musical feeling. A Symphonic Rhapsody by Mr. Henry Gibson, of the Royal College of Music, was less satisfactory. The instrumentation testifies to knowledge of effect and resource, but the thematic material is deficient in significance, and although certain passages are impressive, the work in its entirety leaves an impression of patchiness and diffuseness. The third orchestral novelty, a Symphony in C minor by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, of the Royal Academy of Music, proved the most important production. The symphony opens with an energetic subject of pronounced and despotic character, which is vigorously treated and effectively contrasted with other thematic material, the result being an interesting and effective first movement. The second section, an Adagio, possesses considerable poetic charm. Very effective use is made of the horns, which provide a touch of romance that stirs the imagination of the listener. This is followed by a Scherzo full of life, which sparkles on its way with an occasional touch of humour brightening its course. The Finale opens with a brief introduction, Adagio maestoso, which gives place to an Allegro vivo, and brings the symphony to a vigorous conclusion. The scoring is well balanced, admirably varied and picturesque, while a special merit of the work is its clearness and terseness of expression, the entire composition only occupying half-an-hour in performance. Of two violoncello solos, severally named 'Evensong' and 'Spinning-song,' by Mr. J. Speaight, of the Guildhall School of Music, the former is the most attractive, being expressive and melodious. The solo part was tastefully played by Mr. Charles Warwick Evans. 'Two Characteristic Pieces' for violin and orchestra, by Mr. Thomas F. Morris, of the Royal College, are worthy of being published. The music is graceful and full of character, and the solo part, excellently rendered by the composer, is effectively laid out for the instrument. The remainder of the programme consisted of vocal items, the most ambitious being four vocal quartets by Mr. F. C. S. Carey, of the Royal College of Music. These are settings of lines from 'Hawthorn and Lavender' by W. E. Henley, and the music allied to the third poem,

'The rain and the wind,' shows dramatic feeling, but otherwise the music cannot claim distinction. Two songs, severally named 'When the lad for longing sighs' and 'The recruit,' by Mr. H. Balfour Gardiner, who has studied privately, shows commendable avoidance of the conventional. 'The recruit' is a manly ditty with a swinging rhythm, and, sung by Mr. Frederic Austin, so pleased the audience that it had to be repeated. With the exception of the violin solos, when the orchestra was conducted by Sir Charles V. Stanford, each work was directed by its respective composer.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The only novelty at the Students' concert on June 27 at Queen's Hall was a composition entitled 'Orpheus and the sirens,' a sea-picture, for solo, chorus and orchestra, by Mr. Hubert Bath (Goring Thomas Scholar). The composer has selected his text from Book XIV. of 'The life and death of Jason,' by William Morris, and the music bears witness to melodic inventiveness, a lively imagination, and considerable power of expression combined with much knowledge of effect. The work may be described as a small cantata for soprano and tenor soloists and female chorus. The solo parts were neatly sung by Miss Olive Clare and Mr. John Bardsley, and the ensemble testified to careful rehearsal. Several other vocalists sang. Miss Marie Isabel Wadia showed much intelligence in her rendering of 'Aus tiefe des Grames,' from Max Bruch's 'Achilleus'; Mrs. Alice G. Prowse attacked the exacting scena 'Ocean, thou mighty monster' (Weber); Miss Ida Kahn gave a dignified reading of Schubert's 'Die Allmacht'; and Mr. Leslie Mackay brought forward Mozart's 'Mentre ti lascio, O figlia.' The instrumentalists were Miss Christian O. Carpenter (pianoforte), Mr. Rowsby Woof, Wessely exhibitor (violin), and Mr. Frederick W. Hodgkinson (violinoncello), all of whom showed skill in their several performances. The orchestra, conducted by Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, gave sympathetic support to the soloists, and opened the afternoon's music with a vivacious rendering of the overture to Auber's 'Marco Spada.'

The annual prizes were distributed at Queen's Hall, on July 20, by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, President of the institution.

The following awards have been made: the Melba Prize (sopranos) to Ida Kahn (London); the Melba Prize (contraltos) to Isabel F. Harvey (Bournemouth); the Heathcote Long Prize (male pianists) to Francis Hutchens (Christchurch, New Zealand); the Joseph Maas Prize (tenors) to Thomas Gibbs (Ystradgynlais); the Frederick Westlake Memorial Prize (female pianists) to Myra Hess; the Walter Macfarren Gold Medals (pianists) to Christian Carpenter and Percy Wilson; the Hannah Mayer Fitz-Roy Prize (male violinists) to Francis Joseph Thorns (Weston-under-Lizard); the Charlotte Walters Prizes (elocutionists) to Dorothy Webb and James McNaughton Duncan; the Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal (contraltos) to Edith Kirk; the Julia Leney Prize (harpists) to Elizabeth Bellaby; the Schloesser Prize (accompanists) to Percy Wilson.

Ten scholarships or exhibitions will shortly be competed for, full particulars of which can be obtained upon application to the Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

At the orchestral and choral concert on July 19 were produced two short pieces for orchestra by Mr. Gustav von Holst which deserve praise. The first, entitled 'Country song,' is a pleasing little pastorella, a musical example of impressionism which happily suggests the green fields and village interests. The second piece, called 'Marching Song,' is a stirring and manly composition that merits publication. The music is based on a strong and well-defined melody, and its development and treatment are highly effective. Full justice was done to these novelties by the College orchestra, conducted by Mr. von Holst, who was twice recalled to the platform by enthusiastic applause. Under the direction of Sir Charles V. Stanford an excellent rendering was given of Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and a special feature of the evening was the performance of Part III. of Schumann's 'Scenes from Goethe's "Faust."' Miss Maria Yelland's fine voice was advantageously heard in the air 'Ah! mon fils,' from Meyerbeer's 'Prophète,' and Mr. F. G. Parkington played Max Bruch's 'Canzona' for violoncello solo with notable skill and refined expression.

MR. W. J. TOLLEMACHE'S CONCERT.

The composer submits himself to a severe test who gives a concert consisting entirely of his own compositions, and Mr. Tollemache would have been more discreet had he presented fewer of his works at Æolian Hall on July 2. The programme comprised a Scherzo in C for string quartet, a Theme and variations for violin and pianoforte, a Sonata in G minor for the same instruments, a Sonata in A minor for violoncello and pianoforte, a Pianoforte trio, and six songs. Beginning his musical education at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and completing it in Germany, Mr. Tollemache has acquired a facility of expression and command of academical devices which enable him to present his ideas in scholarly and acceptable form. He has also a certain gift of melodic invention, but the academic influence is too manifest in his writing. His art is not sufficiently concealed, and although his music possesses some individuality, it lacks the spontaneity and freedom expected by modern music lovers to-day. The composer was capably assisted by Miss Winifred Christie (pianoforte), Madame Nettie Carpenter (violin), Mr. E. A. Yonge (second violin), Mr. Russell Turrell (viola), and the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford and Herr Ludwig Lebell (vocalists).

Miss Irene Ainsley is a young artist with whom Dame Fortune would seem to be singularly prepossessed. Three years ago Madame Melba, while on tour in Australia, heard Miss Ainsley sing, and was so impressed by the quality of her voice that she undertook to defray the cost of her musical education. Thereupon Miss Ainsley was placed for two years under Madame Fisher in London, and for a twelvemonth under Madame Mathilde Marchesi in Paris, and finally Madame Melba arranged a concert for her protégée at the Bechstein Hall on July 10, which was honoured by the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Few young artists have been so favoured, and Miss Ainsley's future career will certainly be watched with interest. Her voice is of fine quality, contralto in timbre with brilliant upper notes. She sang Handel's 'Ombra mai fu,' Bemberg's 'Chant Hindou,' and Böhm's 'Still wie die Nacht' with intelligence and in a manner that testified to careful training, but it was manifest that the young artist has yet a good deal more to learn. Madame Melba played the accompaniments to the above songs, and subsequently presented Madame Marchesi to the Prince and Princess of Wales. Songs were contributed by Miss Parkina, and violin and harp solos, played respectively by the little fairy fiddler, Vivian Chartres, and by Miss Sassoli, completed the programme.

Master Lionel Ovenden, the extraordinarily gifted boy violinist and pianist, gave a concert at Queen's Hall on June 26, when, supported by the London Symphony Orchestra (conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald), he attacked the solo part of Beethoven's Violin concerto and the pianoforte part of Mozart's Concerto in D. It need scarcely be said that he was overweighted in the first-named classic, but the playing of the little fellow was wonderful in its intelligence and executive ease. He is decidedly more advanced as a violinist than as a pianist, but his interpretation of Mozart's music was sympathetic and marvellous for a boy of his tender years.

Record is due of the highly successful début on July 12, at Æolian Hall, of Miss Marguerite Claire, a native of Atlanta, Georgia. Miss Claire has a soprano voice of pure and brilliant quality, which has been so well trained and is so flexible that her rendering of Handel's 'Sweet bird,' with its exacting fiorture, was quite enjoyable. Familiar scenes and songs were interpreted with like success, and there can be little doubt that Miss Claire has only to sing to win the hearts of her listeners.

Musical Competition Festivals.

THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

The Second Annual Conference of this Association was held on June 27 at Messrs. Broadwood's. In the unavoidable absence of Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis, Chairman of the Committee, Miss Mary Egerton presided. Miss Wakefield and Dr. W. G. McNaught, the Hon. Secretaries, in submitting the annual report, said the movement continued to make satisfactory progress throughout the country. The festivals already established had been in most cases more successful than ever before, and six new festivals had been started: Bury (Lancashire), Morpeth, Hull, Newcastle, Rutland, and Witham (Essex). The committee for the new year was elected and was constituted as follows: President, Her Grace the Duchess of Norfolk; Chairman of Committee, Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis; Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, and as Secretaries Miss Wakefield and Dr. McNaught, and Treasurer Mr. W. H. Leslie.

A series of interesting and valuable papers, followed by discussions, were read on the following subjects:

MUSIC FOR COMPETITIONS AND FOR CONCERTS.

Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland: 'Old music' }
The Hon. Everard Feilding (Brigg): 'Modern music' } For competitions.
Dr. R. Vaughan Williams: 'Concert music' (The competitors as audience).

THE ORGANIZATION OF COMPETITIONS.

Mrs. T. A. Argles (Westmorland Festival).

CHOIR TRAINING.

Dr. Percy Buck.
Mr. John James (Nesley Cauldon Choir).
Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt (conductor of the Manchester Orpheus Glee Society).
Dr. Henry Coward.
Digests of these papers will be found in the August issue of The School Music Review.

The speakers in the various discussions following the reading of the papers were: Mr. Hatchard (Pontefract), Mrs. Massingberd (Spilsby), Mr. J. Graham (Stratford), Mr. Cooper (Blackpool), Miss S. A. Blunt (Berks, Bucks and Oxon), Canon Rawsley, Mr. Mansell, The Hon. Everard Feilding, The Hon. Norah Dawnay, Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes, Dr. Percy Buck, Miss Wakefield and Dr. W. G. McNaught and Mr. W. H. Leslie.

SOUTHPORT, LANCASHIRE.

(July 6 and 7.)

After an experience of the results of the first competitive musical festival that has taken place in this very pleasant seaside town, it is a matter for wonder that such a popular event has not been held here before. The town rejoices in the possession of one of the handsomest halls in the kingdom, and generally the surroundings are favourable to a competitive festival.

A strong committee, aided by a remarkably energetic secretary in the person of Mr. F. W. Jackson, made adequate arrangements to attract the numerous musical organizations in Lancashire and the North generally, with the result that there were about 2,200 competitors. There were twenty classes, including some for violin and pianoforte, soloists of all kinds, and choirs mixed, male voice and female voice. There were in all 140 vocal soloists, and many were really first-rate performers. The chief choral results were as follows:

Mixed-voice choirs.—Challenge shield class.

Tests { 'Tell me, O love' .. .. C. H. H. Parry.
'I love the jocund dance' .. .. F. Corder.
Nine entries. 1st, Burnley Co-operative (Mr. T. Booth); 2nd, Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. E. Hitchon).

Female-voice choirs.

Test—'The Lord is my shepherd' .. .. Schubert.

Ten entries. Southport (Mr. Tattersall) and Blackpool Orpheus (Mr. Clifford Higgin) tied for first place (the adjudicators differing), and Slaithwaite (Mr. T. E. Pearson), second.

Male-voice choirs.—Challenge cup class.

Tests { 'Counsel' .. .. Spohr.
'Feasting I watch' .. .. Elgar.
'The beleaguered' .. .. Sullivan.

Eleven entries, including several of the finest North of England choirs. 1st, Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt), and 2nd, Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke).

The evening audiences were large, and the festival generally was an artistic and a financial success. The Countess of Lathom attended for many hours and gave away the prizes. Dr. McNaught and Dr. Varley Roberts were the chief adjudicators.

MANCHESTER NONCONFORMIST CHOIR UNION.

(June 23.)

The solo singing and choral competitions organized by this enterprising body were held this year in the Royal Botanical Gardens, and attracted a large audience. Eighteen choirs competed in three classes. In the local class Oxford Road Wesleyan (Mr. W. Mottram) gained the first-prize in the small choir section; Moss Side Baptist (Mr. J. W. Turner) that in the larger choir section; and in the open class the Salford Select Choir (Mr. Fred. W. Blacow) was the winner. The test-piece in this class was Elgar's part-song 'My love dwelt in a northern land.' Dr. McNaught adjudicated; Mr. H. Lees Dawson was the official accompanist. The Union announces a performance of 'Elijah' on December 1 in the Free Trade Hall.

TEMPERANCE FÊTE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

(July 14.)

Two great choirs and their friends made the Crystal Palace busy on the occasion of this fête. A juvenile choir of 5,000 voices sang under Mr. Seemer Betts, and an adult choir of 3,000 voices sang under Mr. F. Stone. Both conductors succeeded in keeping their forces together, and the audience was duly gratified. Portsmouth choirs were successful in a choral competition for mixed-voice choirs. In one section the Excelsior was first, and in another section the Clarion was first and the Stamford Street choir second. In the junior section choirs from the same town gained the first and second places. The Mountain Ash choir was first in the male-voice section.

The Blackpool Competition Festival will be held on October 3, 4, 5, and 6. This is one of the leading festivals of the North, in which many of the finest choirs will take part.

Mr. James Bates, the founder of the London School of Choristers, announced recently that he would give at the London Polytechnic an invitation lecture to school teachers on the training of children's voices. As responses came from nearly 5,000 teachers, it was found necessary to transfer the venue to the Queen's Hall, which, on July 21, was nearly filled by an attentive and appreciative audience, mainly of the female sex. It speaks volumes for the interest the scholastic profession takes in this section of their work, that they were willing in such numbers to hear what Mr. Bates had to say. The lecture, which was attractively illustrated at every stage by the admirable performances of 100 boys trained in Mr. Bates's School, was thoroughly educational. What to do and what not to do was made abundantly clear. Ways to get children to place tone and to shape the mouth for the various vowels, the proper manner of breathing, the method of attaining easy production, sweet tuneful tone and of gaining flexibility, were all aptly shown. The larger number of persons interested in this branch of education will be glad to know that an instruction book by Mr. Bates, dealing with the whole matter in detail, will be issued shortly in Novello's Primer series. The chair was taken by Dr. Somervell, and there were on the platform many well-known musical educationists.

Foreign Notes.

BADEN (NEAR VIENNA).

At the second symphony concert of the Kur orchestra, a symphonic poem 'Die Jägersbräut,' by Gustav Grube, was successfully produced.

BERLIN.

Dr. Carl Muck has been chosen to conduct the concerts of the famous Boston (U.S.A.) Symphony Orchestra in succession to Herr Gericke. Dr. Muck's contract with the Royal Opera does not expire for some years, hence he was only able to obtain a six months' leave to conduct the Boston season, from May to October, 1907, after which he returns to his post as Court Kapellmeister at the Berlin Opera. — Berlin will soon have a Wagner quarter, the Town Council of Friedenau (a suburb of the metropolis) having decided to name the streets of a newly-opened district after Wagner works, characters, &c. — After the usual trial-conducting, Dr. Ernst Kunwald has been unanimously elected conductor of the Philharmonie orchestra. He will enter on his duties on June 1, 1907. He is at present first Kapellmeister at the new Royal Opera Theatre. A German 'Brahms Society' has been formed with a capital of 80,000 marks and with Prof. Josef Joachim as honorary President and Kommerzienrath Alexander Lucas as chairman, Court Counsellor Dr. Josef Reitzes deputy chairman, and Prof. Max Friedländer, Dr. Victor Schnitzler, and Herr Hans Simrock as members of the committee. The Society has for its object the acquisition of the copyrights and performing rights of Brahms's works, the spreading of the knowledge of his music, and the preserving of his memory and of everything which bears on his life and work.

CASSEL.

At the last symphony concert the interest centred in the revival of a Symphony in E flat and an overture to an opera 'Undine,' dating from 1805 and 1813 respectively, by E. T. W. A. Hoffmann (1776-1822), a man of genius who might have done great things in music if he had devoted himself wholly to the art instead of dissipating his energies by excursions into literature, criticism, teaching, conducting, painting, singing, theatre management—in fact, anything and everything. Hoffmann is now chiefly known as the author of the 'Views of life of Murr the tomcat, with fragments of the biography of Johann Kreisler, the Kapellmeister,' which inspired Schumann to compose his 'Kreisleriana.' Musicians bear his memory in kindly remembrance, because in 1810 he wrote an essay on Beethoven's fifth Symphony which even in these days compels admiration for its wonderful insight into the character, and appreciation of the greatness, of that work.

DRESDEN.

A concert with a very unusual programme was recently given by the 'Philharmonie,' a Society of some seventy Post Office employes, all of them former members of military bands. Intended to illustrate 'music at the Saxon Court' the programme included a chorus with organ, 'Laudate Dominum omnes gentes,' by elector Johann Georg II. (1673), an overture to 'Siroe,' by Johann Adolf Hasse (1763), a gavotte by Johann Christoph Schmidt (1719), an overture to 'La casa disabitata' (The uninhabited house) by Princess Amalie (1835), four Court ball dances composed by King Anton when still Crown Prince, and songs by Hasse, Hurka, &c. Prof. Otto Schmidt, of Dresden, is the editor of these old-fashioned and yet in their quaint way fascinating pieces.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.

The directors of the famous Museumsgesellschaft concerts decided at their recent annual meeting to invite a number of the most distinguished conductors as 'guests,' each to conduct one of next season's concerts. Mottl, Mahler, Strauss, Nikisch, Steinbach, Toscanini (Turin), Mengelberg (Amsterdam), Wolfram (Heidelberg), Rottenberg (Frankfurt), Andree (Zürich), Suter (Basle), and last, but not least, Wood (of London), are named as those to whom invitations have been sent.

HAMBURG.

In the fire which recently destroyed the Michaeliskirche, the fine old organ, founded by Mattheson in 1748, also fell a prey to the flames.

KISSINGEN.

Cyril Kistler, who some years ago was put forth as the true successor of Wagner in the domain of music-drama, celebrated his forty years' jubilee as an artist on June 25. A concert devoted entirely to his works was arranged by his friends, and included the overture to his latest work, the comic-opera 'Die Kleinstädter,' a menuet from the stage-idyll 'Im Honigmond,' the prelude to Act III. of the opera 'Kunihild,' a valzer-serenade (prelude to Act IV.) and 'Die Hexenküche' (The witch's kitchen) from the music-drama 'Faust.' Needless to say the veteran master was greatly fêted.

LEIPZIG.

The Town Council has at last voted the sum of 15,000 marks towards the 50,000 marks required for a Bach monument that shall be worthy of the master and of the town with which his great name is so intimately connected. Prof. Karl Seffner—already favourably known to all Leipzig visitors by his excellent monument 'Goethe as a youth' in the Naschmarkt—has been chosen as sculptor. His work will be erected in the Thomaskirchhof, which, on account of the characteristic old houses surrounding it, should form a very appropriate background. The statue of Leibnitz, which stands in the Thomaskirchhof, will be removed. Thus the great savant has to make room for the greater musician, and content himself with a corner in the Nicolaikirchhof.

LIVORNO.

A new one-act opera 'Malia,' by Alfredo Manini, was recently produced at the local Goldoni Theatre and well received.

MILAN.

The very latest thing in musical Italy is an 'Automobil hymn' for chorus and orchestra, which was recently produced here with success. The composer, who conducted, is Signor Carlo Gallone, a highly-talented pupil of Josef Rheinberger, and his hymn claims to be a serious work of art.—At a concert of the Scala Orchestra a symphonic poem 'Faith,' by Amilcare Zanella, Mascagni's successor at Pesaro, was very favourably received.—A 'complete' collection of Verdi's letters is being prepared for publication by Signori Mazzatinti and Alessandro Luzio. Some of them, dating from 1849, have already been printed in the Giornale d'Italia.

MUNICH.

Herr Max Reger has resigned his post as professor of organ, counterpoint and composition at the Royal Academy of Music, in order to devote himself wholly to composition and the concert platform. Herr Reger is a splendid pianist, and much in request as a performer of his own enormously difficult compositions.

OFFENBACH.

At the recent annual meeting of the 'Society for folk-lore in Baden' it was decided to prepare a collection of Badensian folk-songs. Since the German Emperor at a great male-voice choir meeting some years ago advocated a return to the rich store of German folk-song, a great deal is being done in the Fatherland to collect and publish suitable material.

OSTEND.

A series of international concerts has been inaugurated by M. Léon Rinskopf with his orchestra of 125 performers. It commenced on July 14 with a French concert (d'Indy, Fauré, Debussy), and was followed on July 21 by two Belgian concerts (Daneau, Dubois, Mestdagh, Guricx, Blockx, Mathieu, and Tinel). Polish, German, Italian, English, Scandinavian, Russian and Finnish concerts will follow in due course.

PALERMO.

A new opera, 'Angelica's flight,' by Alessandro Billi, has been produced here with much success.

PARIS.

A monument at Passy to Benjamin Godard was unveiled on June 14. The sculptor, M. J.-B. Campbell, has taken for his chief 'motive' a scene from the composer's prize-work, the dramatic symphony 'Tasso,' which he never surpassed. A marble bust of Godard crowns the whole, and the inscription reads simply 'A Benjamin Godard, 1849-1895.'—Le Monde musical—which, by-the-way, printed a biography of Sir Edward Elgar in its issue of June 15, and as a supplement a pianoforte arrangement of the Prelude to 'Gerontius'—has arranged to do a brave thing. With a view to testing how far the press and public will agree with the jury's verdict in the recently decided competition for the Cressent prize, it has decided to bear the expense of publicly producing the whole of the works sent in for competition, prized or unprized! The concerts, under the title of 'Festival (sic) de la musique symphonique Française,' will most likely be given in November. The jury consisted of MM. Camille Saint-Saëns, G. Fauré, Vincent d'Indy, Ch. M. Widor, Gédalge, Alfred Bruneau and Georges Hüe.—A new manuscript 'Dixtuor' for wind instruments, by the young Roumanian composer George Enesco, was recently produced by the Society for wind instruments in the Salon de l'avenue d'Antin. According to M. Jean Huré, in Le Monde musical, the work is in reality 'a superb Symphony in D, and a masterpiece, each of the three movements being remarkable for charm, originality, spontaneity and colour, the ten instruments being treated with consummate knowledge of their individual genius.'—'Le Clos' (The farm), a new four-act opera by M. Charles Silver, libretto by M. Michael Carré after Amadée Achar'd's novel, was produced at the Opéra Comique on June 6, and well received. M. Silver is a Prix de Rome prize-holder, and already known by an opera 'The sleeping beauty,' produced at Marseilles, and a number of graceful and poetic orchestral pieces.—The result of the Prix de Rome competition has been published. M. Louis Dumas, a pupil of M. Ch. Lenepveu, has gained the first prize with a cantata 'Ismael,' and M. André Gailhard, a son of the director of the Grand Opera, and also a pupil of M. Lenepveu, the first 'second' grand prize, the second 'second' grand prize going to M. Le Boucher, a pupil of M. Widor and M. Fauré. M. André Gailhard also has been awarded the Chamageran-Hérolt prize of 1800 francs.—The Municipality has decided to build a 'Philharmonic Palace' in the Champs Elysées, in order that the city may at last possess a hall worthy of high-class concerts. At present both the Lamoureux and Colonne orchestral concerts have to be given in theatres.

PRAGUE.

A festival performance of F. Smetana's comic opera 'The bartered bride' was given in the Bohemian National Theatre on May 30, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of its original production on May 30, 1866, since which the charming work has been given no less than 440 times. One of the members of the original cast, Pan Heinrich Mošna, took part in the festival performance in question.—A. Dvořák's grand opera 'Dimitrij' was revived with new scenery on May 1, the anniversary of the great composer's death.

ROME.

The Royal Academy has instituted a prize after the model of the famous Prix de Rome (Paris), which shall enable talented young composers to spend some years in the precincts of the inspiring Eternal City. The present holder of the prize is Signor Gennaro Napoli.—The Philharmonic Academy offers a prize of 50 lire for a requiem for mixed choir (four parts) a capella. The successful work will be produced at the In Memoriam celebration for King Humbert in the Pantheon, in 1907.—A Signor Augusto Corsini claims to have invented an apparatus for improving brass instruments, which will make it possible to avoid all impurities of intonation, increase the volume of tone, and enable performers to execute all shakes faultlessly and with less exertion.

STOCKHOLM.

The first purely Swedish musical festival on May 31 and June 1 was an unqualified success. A choir of 600 voices and an orchestra of eighty performers were heard in a small choral work by Ludwig Norman, on a Latin poem 'Rosa rorans bonitatem,' of the 14th century, a 'Christmas oratorio' by Andreas Hallén, Emil Sjögren's 'Iceland journey' for male chorus and orchestra, Wilhelm Stenhammer's 'One people,' for soli, chorus, and orchestra, and a charming work by Miss Valborg Aulin. The instrumental works were a festival overture by August Södermann, a 'Symphonie singulière' by Franz Berwald—composed in 1845, and not heard again till last season—a festival overture by Karl Valentin, a prelude to Ibsen's 'Brand' by Richard Henneberg, a 'Spring' overture by Ellberg, a 'Northern Symphony' by Adolf Hägg, a symphonic poem, 'Fortune,' by Bror Beckman, and two works by Hugo Alfvén, 'A tale from the Schären' and 'St. John's eve.' There were further included in the programme a ballad 'The Kobold,' for baritone solo and orchestra, by Knut Bäck, a concert piece for pianoforte and orchestra by Adolf Wiklund, a concert piece for five violoncelli and three double-basses, by Andersen, a cantata for chorus and two pianofortes, by Erik Akerberg, a pianoforte trio by Gustav Hägg, a string quintet by Johan Lindegren, Tor Aulin's third Violin concerto, besides songs, unaccompanied choruses, &c., by Lindblad, Josephson, Beckman, Norman, Södermann, Liljeford, Sjögren, Stenhammer, Körling, Jacobson, Peterson-Berger and Morales. So little is known of contemporary Swedish music that the above lengthy list of native composers, and their evidently high and serious aim come as a revelation. Of all these names Emil Sjögren's seems the only one known in England by actual performances of his violin sonatas. Lindblad and Södermann may have appeared in the programmes of song recitals, but that is all. This neglect of the art-work of a young and vigorous nation whose musical history dates back only 200 years should be remedied.

TILSIT.

Performances of operas in concert form are frequent enough, but it is not often that a choral society excels in a scenic representation of a dramatic work. The local oratorio Society, conducted by Musikdirektor Wolff, has, however, performed Gluck's 'Orpheus' at the town theatre with such success that two further performances had to be given. Frä. Liane Brischär was a splendid Orpheus.

VENICE.

A 'dissectible' theatre is at present being built under the direction of Signor Vittorio Bressanin in the local Lyceum. It will be opened during this summer with—it is hard to believe!—Pergolesi's 'La Serva Padrona.'

WEIMAR.

The second Bundersfest (Association Festival) of the 'Chargierten-Convent Verband deutscher Sängerschaften,' under which formidable title we fancy we recognize a 'Students' Choral Union,' took place on June 13 to 15. A choir of 500 voices, conducted by Prof. Jüngst, of Dresden, and Dr. Paul Klengel, of Leipzig, assisted by the Weimar Court Orchestra, was heard with superb effect in the 'Gaudeamus igitur' concluding Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, which opened the proceedings. The programmes included Wagner's 'An die Kunst' (To Art), Rheinberger's 'Mailed,' Attenhofer's 'Sankt Michael,' Kreutzer's 'Frühlingsnähnen,' Klengel's 'Wo klare Brunnlein fliessen,' Marschner's 'Liedesfreiheit,' Zöllner's 'König Sigurd Rings Brautfahrt,' for chorus and orchestra, and three 17th century students' songs by Schein and Adam Krieger. The last-named, originally written for baritone solo, with choral refrain, cembalo, and five-part instrumental ritornelli, were sung in a modern arrangement by O. Richter. The festival concluded with Reinecke's unison chorus with orchestra, 'Deutscher Sang.'

The Moody-Manners Opera Company inaugurated a season of grand opera in English at the Lyric Theatre on July 21 by a performance of 'Lohengrin,' under the conductorship of Herr Richard Eckhold.

Mr. Granville Humphreys, of Manchester, has been appointed musical director of the South London Wesleyan Mission.

'The Council School Hymn Book' has been approved by the Bradford Education Committee for use in their schools.

Answers to Correspondents.

INQUIRER.—(1) Cornets are hybrid instruments, in character between the trumpet and bugle. They are usually in B $\flat$  or A $\sharp$  and agree in pitch and compass with the valve bugle or flügel horn, but the extreme upper notes are rather easier. The modern Flügel horn is virtually a bugle with valves, but as it is usually made of rather smaller bore, the tone is more 'horn-like' or mellow than that of the bugle. The difference in quality between the flügel horn and the cornet may be compared to that between the contralto and soprano voices. In brass bands the instrument is often referred to simply as the 'alto,' but flügel horns are sometimes made of tenor pitch, in F or E $\flat$ . The term Saxhorn covers a wide range of instruments, among them being the flügel horn as described above, any difference between the alto flügel and the alto saxhorn being one of outward form rather than of quality. The family comprises the :

E $\flat$ Soprano saxhorn.
B $\flat$ Alto	(Flügel.)
E $\flat$ Tenor	} also known as Althorns.
B $\flat$ Baritone
B $\flat$ Bass	} also known as
E $\flat$ " "
B $\flat$ Contrabass or Euphonium } " Bombardon } " Tubas.

(2) In reply to your question about the bass trumpet, we cannot do better than quote what Prof. Prout has to say on the subject in his treatise on 'The Orchestra' (Augener). 'This is an instrument the pitch of which is an octave lower than that of the trumpet, and therefore in unison with the horn. It is provided with three valves, like the ordinary valve-trumpet. Its tone, however, has none of the nobility of the true trumpet, but rather resembles that of an inferior trombone. Wagner writes for it in the keys of E, E flat, D and C, noting the part in the G clef. . . . Those who are curious about it can consult the scores of the "Ring des Nibelungen." We know of no other works in which it is to be found.'

W. L. W.—(1) The title 'Moonlight' as applied to Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2) is an absurd one and wholly unwarranted. The designation is said to have been derived from an expression of Rellstab, the critic, who compared the first movement to a boat wandering by moonlight on the Lake of Lucerne. There is absolutely no reason why a sonata should not be a tone-poem or a tone-poem a sonata. (2) A piece of music is the copyright (not 'copywrite') of a composer unless he assigns it away; but in order to secure the copyright of a composition in America, it is necessary to enter it at Washington.

E. F. F.—(1) Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers' (Routledge) will probably meet your requirements, as the preface says they 'were originally written for a periodical for young people.' (2) A 'Hexachord' is a series of six sounds, so disposed as to place a diatonic semitone between the third and fourth notes of the series, the remaining intervals being represented by tones, e.g., G A B C D E. (3) The German name for sharp (in music) is Kreuz; for flat it is Be. Keys, however, are designated by the affixes is and es—e.g., F sharp = Fis; D flat = Des.

C. R. A. M.—(1) Your friend departs not from the truth when he tells you 'that it is possible for a beginner at harmony to study counterpoint along with that subject,' as you express it. (2) As to whether you could 'become a teacher of these subjects in an academy or college either in England or Glasgow,' would depend upon your qualifications, as would the 'salary' (as you put it) appertaining to such an appointment.

H. B. T.—(1) You will find Stainer's 'organ primer' a useful book wherewith to begin the study of the instrument: it contains a series of pieces. (2) It might be difficult to compile a complete catalogue of Clementi's compositions; a long list is, however, given in Eitner's Quellen-Lexikon under 'Clementi.' An edition of the 'Gradus ad Parnassum' containing the original fingering could only be obtained second-hand.

A COMPETITOR.—We cannot possibly adjudicate upon adjudicators, whether they be men of mark, or marks, Tapleys included.

POSITION OF PARTS.—We have always been under the impression that it is easier to read hymn-tunes in short score than in vocal score: anyhow, it would seem to be less difficult to read a vocal score when the parts are placed in their usual order (soprano at the top, and so on) than it it were written alto, tenor, soprano and bass, but, for your encouragement, we may be wrong.

OVERAWED.—'The cause of the marvellously solemn effect of the concluding vocal bars of 'The Lord is a man of war' ('Israel in Egypt') may be attributed to their simplicity, the two voices in diatonic thirds, heightened by the fine effect of the discord (the dominant major ninth) at bars 1 and 2 of the phrase.

F. G. H.—As Faber's hymn 'Faith of our fathers' was published in 1849, and the author has been dead more than seven years, the words are non-copyright. There are various settings of it in different hymnals, but one of the best is that by Sir George Martin, named 'Holy Faith,' No. 890 in 'Additional Hymns with tunes' (Novello).

H. G.—Kindly excuse us from passing judgment on the hymn-tune you have composed; to do so would be to open the flood-gates to similar inquiries, the answers to which would be devoid of general interest and perchance not untended with pain to the composers.

DON QUIXOTE.—You are quite right in your surmise as to our inability to give the names of teachers. There are sure to be some of good report in the town to which you are removing, and you should have no difficulty in finding out 'who's who' and 'which is which' after due inquiry.

E. M.—You are to be warmly congratulated upon having '12 chimes! a new set carols for Christmas publication! Tunes wait engraver. Text will be from plate supplied.' But the question, 'Why not special MUSICAL TIMES issue?' needs special thinking about.

If C. H. W., to whom we replied on p. 494 of the July issue, will communicate with Mr. William Hoyle, Town Hall, Luton, that gentleman may be able to trace from his chant thematic index the composer of the chant in question.

W. G. E.—Too much Czerny is not desirable. Have you looked at 'Selected Pianoforte Studies' (sets 1 and 2), progressively arranged by Franklin Taylor? These short courses of pianoforte technique may be of service to you.

M. S.—The only competition to be held during August of which we have information is the Royal National Eisteddfod at Carnarvon, August 21 to 24, an event well worth your patronage.

H. R.—Dr. Wareing's Harvest Anthem ('He sendeth the springs into the valleys') appeared (as an extra supplement) in THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, 1904: it is published as No. 794 in Novello's series of Octavo Anthems.

FOR STRINGS

(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

RUTH

A HARVEST PASTORAL

SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM,

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

THE ORGAN WORKS

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

EDITED BY

J. F. BRIDGE, MUS. DOC., OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC., OXON.

IN this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

ONE HUNDRED PSALMS

(BIBLE VERSION)

AND

THE CANTICLES

POINTED FOR CHANTING.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

THE TIMES.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor has built a set of beautiful and most interesting orchestral variations on the theme of a negro song or hymn, beginning "I'm troubled in mind," which is almost certainly of purely African origin. As at first presented it does not seem very promising, but the composer does wonders with it and yet preserves its essential character throughout. His work is finely expressive, beautifully scored, and original in design.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer of "Hiawatha" gives us on the present occasion a set of Symphonic Variations on a negro tune which is said to be familiar in America under the title "I'm troubled in mind." The melody in question is characteristic in form and rhythm, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor makes play with it in his own picturesque fashion. . . . It has enough of barbaric suggestion, while both in the handling of the theme and the general orchestral current of the piece there is no want of variety. . . . The new Variations were well, even brilliantly, played; and the audience, in accordance with Philharmonic traditions, greeted them with quite a burst of enthusiasm.

STANDARD.

"Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air," by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, is a work based on a bold theme, which is a real negro melody, and developed with clever orchestration. Effective use is made of the brass and woodwind, especially in the section where the theme assumes a march character. The composer, who conducted, obtained a vigorous rendering of his interesting work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's brilliant talent for orchestral writing is well known, but it has never served him better than in this case. His variations show remarkable freshness and originality of design, and they are scored with an astonishing command of the secrets of tone-colour. At times the influence of Dvorák, particularly in his "New World" vein, is to be traced in the work, but there is no suggestion of anything like plagiarism, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is to be congratulated upon having produced a work which deserves to take a definite place in the modern orchestral repertory.

EVENING STANDARD.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Orchestral Variations on an African Theme" has a genuine negro melody for its chief theme, which is developed with much ingenuity and varied orchestral colour characteristic of the composer's style. It is an effective work which ought to become popular.

MORNING POST.

The work heard for the first time last evening is one of the most striking he has as yet written. The title is perhaps a little misleading. Announced in one place as "Orchestral variations on an African theme," it is styled in another "Symphonic variations on a negro air." The word rhapsody would, however, be more suitable to describe the very brilliant orchestral piece the composer has constructed upon a theme which, we are told in the excellent analytical notes by Messrs. F. Gilbert Webb and Edgar F. Jacques, is known in America under the title of "I'm troubled in mind." There is nothing dry or scholastic in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's treatment of this theme, which undergoes many and varied transformations at his hands. The scoring is admirable throughout and the work is instinct with life and vigour. Under the composer's spirited direction the piece received an excellent interpretation and was evidently greatly appreciated.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air" has his characteristic picturesqueness and fervour. There is real pulse in his music. . . . It contains some good melodic material, and works up to an imposing climax.

GLOBE.

His "Orchestral Fantasia on a Negro Melody" is quite in his old vein. The air itself is both quaint and beautiful, and in his treatment of it he has not only employed all the resources of modern art, but he has also succeeded in preserving its character with singular skill, and the Fantasia is as interesting and effective a piece of work as he has given us for some time.

PALM MALL GAZETTE.

The work is one of haunting beauty, built as it is upon a pathetic negro melody which runs throughout like a golden thread. Certain works by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor which have followed his ever popular "Hiawatha" have not completely commended themselves to our critical judgment; but here his old, fine inspiration seems to have returned to him, and he treats his subject not only in a finely melodic but also in a finely artistic manner. He worked the whole composition up very gradually, but very emotionally, to a fine artistic finish.

THE GUARDIAN.

The theme chosen by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a characteristically melancholy negro melody that does not at the outset appear very promising as the basis of modern variations. But the composer handles it with such spirit and resource, and adorns it with such a wealth of picturesque orchestration that the interest of the work never flags. The most attractive section is that which stands for the slow movement in the symphonic scheme, a passage of rich glowing melody, treated with much polyphonic ingenuity.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

ON

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA
"JOAN OF ARC"

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day,' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

"Proved an unqualified success. . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."

LEEDS MERCURY.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

and with clear intonation and fine quality of voice sang 'Sing ye Praise' with fervency of feeling."—Western Morning News, April 24, 1906.

"Made a highly favourable impression on his first visit to Barnstaple.
He has a voice of excellent quality, the upper register being particularly strong, and he sings with the finish of the true artist. In the 'Watchman Scene' Mr. Plevy showed decided dramatic power, the gradually ascending theme being declaimed with thrilling effect."—North Devon Journal, April 26, 1906.

"MAY QUEEN"—STONEBRIDGE PARK.

"Mr. Henry Plevy, whose ringing tenor had just that dash of plaintiveness that suited the character of the Lover. His rendering of 'O Meadow, clad' was capital, the high notes being well delivered.
The duet which followed was a capital bit of character singing, the pleading of the Lover and the taunting of the May Queen being well brought out."—Willesden Chronicle, May 4, 1906.

WAGNER'S MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

Richard Wagner had not passed out of his teens before his name appeared in an English journal devoted to music. This is contrary to common belief; but the fact remains that seventy-three years ago the Bayreuth master received favourable mention in the columns of the Harmonicon of May, 1833. Here is the extract:

LEIPZIG.

The principal novelties produced at the subscription concerts were, an overture by M. Hartknoch, of original construction and clever in point of instrumentation, and a symphony by Richard Wagner, scarcely twenty years of age, which was much and deservedly applauded.

The Gewandhaus concert at which the Wagner symphony (in C) was performed took place on January 10, 1833. The production of 'Rienzi'—at Dresden, October 20, 1842—was recorded in the Musical World of November 3, 1842, in these words:

DRESDEN. Oct. 24 [1842].

The hundredth representation of 'Der Freischütz' took place on the 13th, and proved a very interesting spectacle. The widow and children of the universally lamented Weber were present.

A new opera, by Wagner, entitled 'Rienzi,' was produced at the Royal Theatre on the 20th, with most complete success. Wagner, who is also author of the libretto, was called for at the end of each of the five acts, and received with enthusiastic plaudits. Madame Schroeder Devrient and Herr Tichatschek were very great in the principal solos, and the mise en scène surpassed all previous productions in this part of the world.

The event was also noticed in the Musical Examiner of November 12, 1842:

'Rienzi,' a grand opera in five acts, the words and music by Herr Richard Wagner, has been produced with immense success at the Court Theatre in Dresden. Madame Schroeder Devrient and Herr Tichatschek (both well known in London) sustained the principal parts.

Further extracts from English musical periodicals of that period—1842 and 1843—will speak for themselves:

DRESDEN. Nov. 20 [1842].

The new opera of Richard Wagner, entitled 'Cola Rienzi,' produced on the 20th of last month at the Royal Theatre, has been triumphantly successful. The poem is by the composer; and the work altogether is highly creditable to modern Germany. The getting up is on the most liberal scale, and in excellent taste; and nothing can exceed the splendid impersonation of the hero by Tichatschek, and Adrian by Schroeder Devrient; the enthusiasm of the audiences has been immense. (Musical World, December 15, 1842.)

DRESDEN. Dec. 12 [1842].

Wagner's 'Cola Rienzi' continues its brilliant success, the theatre being crowded nightly. The opera of 'The Flying Dutchman,' by the same composer, has been put into rehearsal, and will be performed, for the first time in this city, in the course of the present month. (Musical World, December 29, 1842.)

DRESDEN. Dec. 28 [1842].

Joseph Rastrelli, Music-director, died here on the 15th of November. He is much esteemed for his four Masses, for several successful Operas, and for his voluminous miscellaneous compositions. It is expected that Richard Wagner (sic), whose opera of 'Cola Rienzi' has excited so much sensation, will succeed him in his directorship. (Musical World, January 26, 1843.)

DRESDEN.—Wagner's 'Rienzi' is played twice a week to crowded houses. (Musical Examiner, March 11, 1843.)

The Musical Examiner, from which two extracts have been given, was a short-lived but entertaining journal edited by J. W. Davison, who had not then drawn his sword in the anti-Wagnerian crusade. Although no performances of Wagner's music were given in this country during the first half of the 19th century, the foregoing quotations are sufficient to show that, in a quiet, non-controversial way, the name of the composer thus early found its way into English musical journals.

The first public performance in England of a Wagner composition appears to have been by the Amateur Musical Society, April 10, 1854, at the Hanover Square Rooms, at a concert conducted by the late G. A. Osborne, of which, according to the Musical World, Henry Leslie selected the programme. The Wagner novelty, which formed the last piece in the first part of the concert, was entitled:

MARCH, Tannhäuser . . . . . Wagner.

That the March was very much diluted Wagner may be judged from the criticism passed thereupon by the Musical World, evidently from the pen of Mr. Davison, then editor of that journal:

The march of Herr Richard Wagner, the Mahomed of modern music, though eccentric, has some curious and striking points. It laboured under a great disadvantage, however. The original score and parts not being at hand, a new orchestral arrangement was made for the occasion; and this fact may possibly have militated to its disadvantage. We cannot say that it was entirely understood.

It would be interesting to know who made this 'new orchestral arrangement for the occasion.' Under the circumstances is it any wonder that 'it laboured under a great disadvantage,' and that it failed to be 'entirely understood'?

At the concert of the New Philharmonic Society of May 1, 1854, given at St. Martin's Hall and conducted by Dr. Henry Wylde, the overture to 'Tannhäuser' was first performed in England. The Musical World (J. W. D.)—which spoke favourably of Dr. Wylde's 'music to Paradise Lost,' performed at the concert—thus anathematised the Wagner novelty:

After all the talk that has been, at home and abroad, about Herr Richard Wagner's overture to Tannhäuser, we certainly were led to expect something better than we heard. It is enormously difficult to play, and taxed the powers of the magnificent band, under Herr Lindpainter's direction, to the utmost. With regard to the music, it is such queer stuff, that criticism would be thrown away upon it. We never listened to an overture at once so loud and empty. And Richard Wagner, according to Franz Liszt, is entrusted with no less important a mission than the regeneration of the musical art.

The Times—through the pen of J. W. D.—said: ‘The almost impossible overture [Tannhäuser] would do very well for a pantomime or Easter piece. It is a weak parody of the worst compositions, not of M. Berlioz, but of his imitators. So much fuss about nothing, such a pompous and empty commonplace, has seldom been heard.’ These extraordinary criticisms of one of the most popular orchestral compositions now in vogue typify those fusillades which, half a century ago and even later, bombarded the Wagnerian stronghold, with the result that ‘the music of the future’ has vanquished the criticisms of the past.

It was in the natural order of things that when Wagner conducted the Philharmonic concerts during the season of 1855, his music should have found a place in the programmes. In the course of the eight concerts the ‘Tannhäuser’ overture was twice performed, the second time by royal ‘command.’ At the second concert—Hanover Square Rooms, March 26, 1855—‘Lohengrin’ made its first appearance in an English programme thus:

Selection from ‘Lohengrin, the Knight of the Grail’; Introduction, instrumental; Bridal Procession, Wedding Music and Epithalamium ... .. Wagner.

At that time analytical programmes were unknown at the Philharmonic concerts, only the words of the vocal pieces being printed. On this occasion, however, brief explanatory annotations, without music-type examples, were furnished to the ‘Lohengrin’ excerpts; moreover, as Beethoven’s Choral Symphony was also performed, an English translation of Wagner’s ‘analysis’ (written at Dresden in 1846) increased the size of the programme to the unusual dimensions of twelve pages, presented gratis to the audience.

We must now change the venue to the Crystal Palace, where Sir August Manns conducted his first concert on October 20, 1855, and where, on April 26, 1856, a selection from ‘Tannhäuser’ was performed under his direction. In this connection the veteran conductor has kindly supplied the following autobiographical information specially for this article. Sir August writes:

‘The selection from Tannhäuser performed at the Crystal Palace on April 26, 1856, consisted of extracts stealthily copied by me from a printed full-score of the opera brought by a young Polish Count to Posen in 1848, where the Prussian infantry regiment No. 5, in the band of which I was at that time one of the first clarinets, had its garrison. These excerpts—of which a good many were in a sort of “short-hand-copy” of my own invention—comprised the beginning, ending, and some of the Venusberg music of the overture; Tannhäuser’s pilgrimage; the festive tournament-march; Wolfram’s “evening star” song; and other selections which caught my fancy. These sketches I did not utilise until the autumn of 1852, when I, as Herr von Roon’s bandmaster of the 33rd regiment stationed at Cologne, had to attend the autumn manoeuvres with the regiment. I took my Tannhäuser sketches with me and filled up my spare time arranging them for orchestra in the form of an ordinary “opera selection,” retaining as much as possible of the composer’s original orchestration. This “Fantasia from Tannhäuser”—as I christened it for my subsequent “Concerts à la Strauss” at Cologne, and Amsterdam—became and remained one of my most popular pieces in my programmes, even at the Crystal Palace, from 1856 to the end of the daily concerts in May, 1900.’

‘I conducted my first performance of the Tannhäuser overture from the actual score which I had copied at Posen in 1848, during the three days and nights in which the said full-score (printed) was in my temporary possession. It seems that I had fallen asleep on the third night and that something must have gone wrong with my tallow candle, as my MS. had caught fire and burned the right-hand corner rather conspicuously. This damaged MS. was—to my great regret—destroyed in the fire at the Crystal Palace in 1868: it was to me a cherished memento of my youthful Wagner-enthusiasm. I should add that the cause of my stealthy and urgent copying of the Tannhäuser overture was due to the fact that the young Polish Count very earnestly urged speed and secrecy, on account of his having left Dresden hurriedly, he being under the impression that his participation in the revolutionary movement had stamped him as an active political suspect: this revolutionary movement, at that time agitating the whole of the Continent, shortly afterwards compelled Richard Wagner to fly for his life to Switzerland.’

‘My daily programmes from the very beginning (in 1855) included the Overture and the Battle-hymn from Rienzi, arranged by myself for a military band; but with the sole exception of the Tannhäuser selection and overture, my early Wagner sympathies met with so little encouragement that works like the Meistersinger overture had to be avoided.’

The concert to which Sir August Manns refers at the beginning of his interesting Wagneriana does not seem to have been noticed in the newspapers of the day—in fact it does not seem to have been considered worthy of being called a concert, judging from the following advertisement in the Morning Post of April 26, 1856, although the musical menu was one not to be despised. Here is the advertisement:

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

In consequence of the numerous works now in progress for the ensuing season, the usual concert cannot be given this day, but the following selection of music will be performed by the Company’s Band, commencing at 3 o’clock: Marche ‘Hongroise,’ Berlioz; Overture ‘Olympia,’ Spontini; ‘Benediction des Poignards,’ Meyerbeer; Waltz ‘Guirlande,’ Strauss; Overture ‘La Gazza Ladra,’ Rossini; Selection from the Opera ‘Tannhäuser,’ Wagner; ‘Invitation to the Waltz,’ Weber and Berlioz; Mazurka ‘Des Polen Traum,’ A. Manns; Allegretto and Finale, Symphony 8, Beethoven; Overture ‘Athalia,’ Mendelssohn.

The overture to ‘Rienzi’ was first performed (in England) at the Philharmonic concert of June 12, 1865, conducted by Sterndale Bennett, who had previously (May 4, 1863) conducted the 'March from the opera of Tannhäuser.' We must, however, return to the Crystal Palace—the scene of so many 'first performances in England'—for our next contribution to this Wagnerian survey. The programme-book of the Saturday concert on October 10, 1868, opened with the following quotation, which tells its own tale:

MARCH (Meistersinger) .. .. . Wagner.
(First time.)

This is the first piece of music from Wagner's new opera of 'Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg' that has reached this country. It is not perhaps strictly speaking a march, but is intended to accompany a procession of the 'Mastersingers,' their disciples and others, through the market-place to the stage on which they are to declaim their poems. It occurs in the 'Fifth Scene'—near the close of the opera. It is a bold and spirited piece of music, but Wagner's genius is so essentially dramatic that even a march by him can hardly make its full effect away from the scene to which it belongs.

Concerning the reception accorded to the 'Meistersinger March,' Sir August Manns says: 'I only remember that it disappointed everybody.' At the Philharmonic concert of April 25, 1870, the Preislied from 'Die Meistersinger' was sung for the first time here. It seems strange, indeed almost incomprehensible, that so beautiful an example of Wagner's genius should have met with an unfavourable reception, even in the columns of THE MUSICAL TIMES! As we have quoted the onslaughts of Mr. Davison, it is only fair to mete out the same treatment to this journal; if nothing else, it may serve as a warning to critics. We read—in the issue of June, 1870, p. 491:

If the 'Preislied,' sung by Dr. Gunz, be really a favourable specimen of Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger,' we trust that our duty will not compel us to hear the rest of the Opera, for assuredly our pleasure will not prompt us to hazard such an experiment.

No complete opera of Wagner's was performed in England until the representation of 'The Flying Dutchman' at Drury Lane Theatre on July 23, 1870. The work was given in Italian ('L'Olandese Dannato') under the conductorship of the late Signor Arditì, and the cast included Mlle. Ilma di Murska (Senta), Signor Foli (Daland), and Mr. Santley (the Dutchman). The Musical World reported that 'the house was not very full,' and added, 'In revenge, however, the audience was uproarious from first to last.' THE MUSICAL TIMES said: 'That every one of the audience felt under the influence of a man who had struck out an original path for himself, and had power enough to make others accompany him, was apparent by the deep interest with which every note was listened to, and the enthusiastic applause with which the various pieces were received.'

Two marches must now claim our attention—(i.) the 'Kaisermarsch,' performed at the Crystal Palace concert of April 29, 1871—conducted by Mr. Wedemeyer, assistant-conductor of the band, in the absence, through illness, of Mr. Manns—and (ii.) the 'Huldigungsmarsch,' played at the concert given by Mr. Walter Bache, St. James's Hall, February 28, 1873, and conducted by the concert-giver. It should be noted that the 'Kaisermarsch' was performed at the Crystal Palace only a fortnight after its production at Berlin, on April 14, 1871.

The seventies of the last century witnessed a Wagnerian warfare that waged fierce and long. Wagnerians and anti-Wagnerians girded on their stoutest armour, and having sharpened their swords they came forth in battle array to settle the question 'To be or not to be?' Much ink and paper were used (and wasted) by the party who attacked 'the music of the future' and the man who created it. 'Not to be,' shouted they in strident tones, while those enthusiasts who acted upon the defence not only had no thought of capitulating, but took full tactical advantage in performing the master's music.

Foremost among the small number of Wagner disciples at that time and in this country was the late Edward Dannreuther, a distinguished man whose memory will long be revered by those who were fortunate enough to enjoy his friendship. An interesting contribution to the Wagner propaganda in England is furnished by the following extract from the biographical sketch of Mr. Dannreuther which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of October, 1898:

THE WORKING MEN'S SOCIETY.

Mr. A. J. Hipkins kindly supplies an interesting side-light by the loan of a little memorandum book recording the operations of 'The Working Men's Society.' The members forming this Society were Karl Klindworth, Edward Dannreuther, Frits Hartvigson, Walter Bache, and Alfred Hipkins, the last-named being a non-performing member, but by no means a disinterested listener. The weekly meetings, held at the houses or lodgings of the members in turn, began on July 27, 1867, and lasted for two years. At these gatherings much of Liszt's pianoforte music, in addition to Chopin, the later sonatas of Beethoven and Schumann, was played by the members, who freely criticised each other, except in the case of Klindworth; he, being so much the senior of the other enthusiasts, was looked upon as the mentor of the party. 'Arrangements' were by no means tabooed, as witness the first programme of the Working Men's Society as recorded in Mr. Hipkins's little red book:

- July 27, 1867.
At Klindworth's, 74, Cambridge Street, Pimlico.
K. and D. Beethoven's 9th symphony, for 2 pianos, arranged by Liszt. First three movements.
K. and D. f 'Fête chez Capulet' (Romeo and Juliet), Berlioz.
H. and B. l Arranged for 2 pianos, 8 hands, by Klindworth.
H. Rubinstein's 4th concerto in D minor, accompanied by B. (Rubinstein played this concerto at Hartvigson's, June 22, 1867.)
*.* Abbreviations: K. = Klindworth. D. = Dannreuther.
H. = Hartvigson. B. = Bache.

But of special interest is the record that, beginning on January 18, 1868, Wagner's 'Das Rheingold' was played by Karl Klindworth week by week, except once, when Dannreuther was in Dublin. Later on, March 20, Klindworth treated 'Die Walküre' in a similar manner; and in the following year, when Klindworth had gone to Moscow, Dannreuther played through 'Tristan.' Thus we get this interesting historical fact: that the earliest performances in England of two sections of Wagner's 'Ring' took place, without orchestra, vocalists, or scenery, at the residences of Messrs. Klindworth & Co.

The Wagner Society (London), initiated by and kept going with the whole-hearted enthusiasm of Edward Dannreuther, gave its first concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on February 19, 1873, with so much success that it was repeated at St. James's Hall on March 6 following. The programme included the Overture and the Introduction to the Third Act of 'Die Meistersinger,' both performed on this occasion, so far as we can discover, for the first time in England; and at the concert of November 14, 1873, the 'Meeting of the Meistersingers' (Act 1) was played, all under the inspiring conductorship of Dannreuther. To the year 1873 also belongs a little known concert performance of 'Lohengrin.' This was given by the New Philharmonic Society, conductor Dr. Wylde, at St. James's Hall, on June 7 (public rehearsal) and June 11 (performance). The Musical Standard thus criticised the performance:

As we fully expected, the opera as a whole is felt to be heavy. Professor Ella has picked out the plums, after the fashion of 'little Jack Horner,' and left the 'stick-jaw' for Dr. Wylde to masticate and digest as best he may.

And the notice concluded thus:

The orchestra and chorus were most efficient, and Dr. Wylde has rendered a real service to art by producing a great work. The opera is sung in Italian, an English version, by Mr. Oxenford, being printed in parallel columns. The reason for this lingual travestie we cannot give; but we do not like it.

Among the soloists who took part in this non-stage performance of 'Lohengrin' was Mr. Maybrick, who impersonated Count Frederick, but who has since won his laurels in another rôle.

At the Crystal Palace, on October 10, 1874, the 'Faust Overture' obtained its first hearing in England, conducted by Sir (then Mr.) August Manns. 'G'—i.e., Sir George Grove—after referring to Hans von Bülow's pamphlet 'Ueber Richard Wagner's Faust-Overture,' concludes his analysis of the Overture thus:

The Introductions to Cherubini's overtures, however, with which Dr. von Bülow compares it, are hardly fit subjects of comparison, their aim being so much less serious, and their whole character and sentiment more restricted and subdued. It would have been more to the point if he had mentioned the opening of Beethoven's 'Leonora' Nos. 2 and 3, of Schumann's 'Genoveva and Manfred,' or of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony. How far Wagner's Overture can maintain its equality with those great works, it will be for a thoughtful audience to decide. It is at any rate a work of remarkable interest and significance, and must shortly make its way into English concert rooms.

Wagner's opera 'Lohengrin' had to wait twenty-five years before it received its stage representation in this country. Produced at Weimar, under Liszt's direction, August 28, 1850, it was first performed here, in Italian, at Covent Garden Theatre on May 8, 1875, conducted by Signor Vianesi. Madame Albani proved to be an ideal Elsa, and among the huge and spell-bound audience on that occasion were our present King and Queen, then Prince and Princess of Wales. In the course of a long and not unfavourable notice of the performance, The Times (J. W. D.) said:

... this singularly interesting drama, in feeling so truly poetical, in simplicity of design, in purity of conception and logical symmetry of form, so beautiful that, from a certain point of view, it seems almost incredible that Wagner the poet should also be Wagner the composer. Whatever may be said, and from whatever point of view, about the music of Wagner, and the theory upon which he constructs it, as a necessary element of the drama, to deny his high poetical tendency, even in the musical treatment of the subjects he appropriates—would be absurd. We may question the soundness of his theories; we have often questioned it, and see no reason, even while acknowledging the genuine beauties that save Lohengrin and Tannhäuser (whatever may be urged against Tristan und Isolde, and the Trilogy, hovering in the distance) from the charge of unceasing monotony, why we should not question it again.* But what cannot fail to enlist sympathy is an earnestness which carries him, with more or less artistic self-contentment, through every task he sets himself. No libretto manufacturer would be satisfied with Wagner, and with no libretto manufacturer would Wagner feel satisfied. For this reason he makes his poems for himself, and in their way these poems are unexampled. The style in which they are made to submit to the exigencies of music will, however, always be discussed.

The year 1876 was a memorable one in the life of Wagner, in that 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' reached its full fruition by the performances of the Trilogy during the month of August at Bayreuth. This great event furnished English writers with abundant material for their views on the art creed of Wagner as exemplified in his wonderful creation. Although Wagnerian interest was chiefly centred in the little Bavarian town which the master had made his own, the year was not barren of first performances in England. On May 6 (1876), at Covent Garden Theatre, 'Tannhäuser' received its first representation here. Like unto 'Lohengrin,' performed in the previous year, the opera was sung in the Italian language, Signor Vianesi conducted, and 'the Elizabeth of Mlle. Albani was in every way equal to her Elsa.' The Centennial March composed for the opening of the Philadelphia Exhibition is said to have been first performed here in the summer of 1876 at the Alexandra Palace, conducted by the late H. Weist Hill; but the exact date cannot at present be ascertained. At the Birmingham Festival—September 1, 1876—'The Holy Supper of the Apostles' (Das Liebesmahl der Apostel) was sung under the direction of Sir Michael Costa. On October 4 the Funeral March from 'Götterdämmerung' found a place in the programme of the Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre, conducted by Signor Ardit, and performed 'by the full orchestra and band of the Coldstream Guards.' It was encored and repeated. The Musical World said:

The theatre was crammed, and the audience enthusiastic. Wagner, whose march was played three nights in succession, is assuredly now on his trial among us. His prospects look fair enough.

Mention must be made of a performance of the 'Flying Dutchman,' sung to an English text, given by the Carl Rosa Opera Company at the Lyceum Theatre on October 6, 1876, conducted by Carl Rosa.

At St. James's Hall, on March 16, 1877, an orchestral concert was given in aid of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind (Norwood), on which occasion the last piece in the programme was stated thus :

Der Ritt der Walküren ... .. Wagner.

(As specially arranged for concert purposes.)

(First performance in London.)

Sir August Manns, who conducted this concert, says that the above well-known piece may have been previously played, perhaps by way of a public rehearsal, at the Crystal Palace; but as, unfortunately, the daily programmes have been destroyed, it is impossible to confirm this.

In the year 1877 Wagner paid his third and last visit to England in order to conduct the Wagner festival held at the Royal Albert Hall. Six concerts were given—on May 7, 9, 12, 14, 16, and 19—the composer being greatly assisted in the conductorship by Hans Richter, his first visit to England. As a matter of fact, although Wagner was announced as conductor of the festival, the actual duties of directing the orchestra were discharged by his valued friend, Hans Richter, to whom the master wrote: 'For the accomplishment of my London scheme, you are indispensably necessary to me; yes, without your help I really could not think of undertaking these concerts.' In addition to compositions that had been previously performed in England, the programmes included excerpts from 'Rienzi,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Tristan' and the 'Ring' trilogy. During his sojourn in London, Wagner was the guest of Mr. Edward Dannreuther at his house, 12, Orme Square, Bayswater, which caused Punch, in an article signed 'Hooky Walkyre,' to say :

Orme ! Orme ! Orme ! sweet Orme !

Ho ! Mynheer von Wagner, there's no place like Orme !

The opera 'Rienzi' obtained its first representation in this country in an English version of the text made by John P. Jackson, when it was performed by the Carl Rosa Opera Company at Her Majesty's Theatre, January 27, 1879. Carl Rosa conducted, and the cast included the late Georgina Burns and Joseph Maas. Later in the year the 'Siegfried Idyll' received its first performance here at the hands of Sir August Manns, at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of May 3, 1879.

We may now pass on to the memorable year 1882, which saw the first stage representations in England of 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' (under Anton Seidl), and 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Tristan und Isolde' (under Hans Richter). It may be convenient for reference if we give the opera representations—except 'Parsifal,' which has not yet been seen on the stage here—in tabulated form :

Opera.	Date of performance.	Place.	Conductor.
Der fliegende Holländer (in Italian)	July 23, 1870	Drury Lane Theatre	Arditi.
Lohengrin (in Italian)	May 8, 1875	Covent Garden Theatre	Vianesi.
Tannhäuser (in Italian)	May 6, 1876	Do.	Do.
Rienzi (in English)	January 27, 1879	Her Majesty's Theatre	Carl Rosa.
Der Ring des Nibelungen
Das Rheingold	May 5,
Die Walküre	" 6,
Siegfried	" 8,	Do.	Anton Seidl.
Götterdämmerung (in German)	" 9,
Die Meistersinger (in German)	May 30, 1882	Drury Lane Theatre	Hans Richter.
Tristan und Isolde (in German)	June 20, 1882	Do.	Do.

The Prelude to 'Parsifal' was played at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of October 28, 1882 (conducted by Sir August Manns), and concert performances of the opera were given by the Royal Choral Society, at the Royal Albert Hall, on November 10 and 15, 1884, conducted by the late Sir Joseph Barnby. On February 15, 1887, at one of his London Symphony Concerts at St. James's Hall, Mr. Henschel conducted the 'first public performance in accordance with the MS. score' of 'Träume' (Dreams), a study for orchestra to 'Tristan und Isolde'; and on November 29 in the same year (1887), under the same auspices and at the same place, Mr. Henschel brought to a first hearing in England Wagner's early Symphony in C. The duet from the opera 'Die Feen' was sung by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel at their vocal recital at St. James's Hall on February 15, 1889, and four days later Mr. Henschel conducted the overture to 'Die Feen' at one of the London Symphony Concerts, also held at St. James's Hall. Finally—although no attempt has been made to exhaust the subject—Wagner's Pianoforte sonata in E flat was performed by Sir Charles Hallé on May 24, 1889, at one of his Chamber Concerts given at St. James's Hall.

The portrait of Wagner which forms one of the extra supplements to our present issue is reproduced, by special permission, from a photograph taken by Messrs. Elliott & Fry in 1877, during the last visit of Wagner to England, at the age of sixty-four.

*Once more the gate behind me falls,
Once more before my face

TENNYSON.

In the time of King Canute there lived a smith at Montacute who dreamed that he was bidden to take the parish priest and some neighbours to dig on the summit of the adjoining hill. The fruit of their labours was the discovery of a flint cross. Earl Tovi at once harnessed twelve red oxen and twelve white cows to a cart, in order to convey the relic to a fitting home. The beasts would not move, till the priest hit upon the expedient of calling out the names of various estates, and, on the mention of Waltham, they fortunately began their journey. Earl Tovi was steward of the household, and had his weald-ham or country house in the woodlands here beside the river Lea; hence the name of Waltham and Holy Cross, its affix.

So the story goes. Let us look a little further into the origin and history of a fine Norman church situated thirteen miles from London and close to that river from whose banks Izaak Walton was wont to pursue his favourite pastime.

Upon his recovery from an attack of paralysis, King Harold II. (then Earl) visited the manor of Waltham and, on the site of a church built by Tovi, he erected the noble building which is now known as Waltham Abbey Church. With Edward the Confessor, the Founder was present at the consecration of the sacred edifice on Holy Cross day, May 3, 1060. Six years afterwards, at the memorable battle of Hastings, Harold met his death; his body was ultimately interred within the stately edifice he had caused to be built. The place of sepulture is, however, unknown; but there is preserved in the church a piece of ironstone which is traditionally believed to be part of Harold's tomb. This relic is about sixteen inches long, and ten inches broad at its widest part, and upon it is carved a curious representation of a warrior's face, underneath which is the name 'Harold,' cut in modern letters. Harold's foundation was collegiate, not monastic; but in 1177 Henry II. transformed the minster into a monastery, or abbey, with prior, abbot and Augustinian monks, and it had the distinction of being one of the richest and most powerful monasteries in the kingdom, which is saying a great deal. Like his grandfather, King Henry III. showed his love for Waltham. He advanced the abbot to the dignity of a Lord of Parliament, and further swelled the coffers of the Abbey by granting the monks the privilege of holding in the town two annual fairs and a weekly market; these commercial institutions flourish to this day, though not under ecclesiastical auspices.

We may now pass on to the time of the Reformation, which is said to have had its inception at Waltham, and curiously enough in a house in the Romeland! In the year 1528 Henry VIII. visited Waltham, at which time Cranmer, then a Cambridge Doctor of Divinity, was tutor to the sons of a Mr. Cressy who lived in the Romeland, now a market square and used as the Cattle Market. On that occasion Mr. Cressy entertained Fox and Gardiner, the famous statesmen of that reign, and Cranmer. At supper the Cambridge D.D. sounded the note of the Reformation under the shadow of the venerable Abbey.

Twelve years later (in March, 1540), by order of Thomas Cromwell, vicar-general, the monastery was dissolved, after having existed for 363 years. The endowments—realizing an annual income of £1,000, i.e., £10,000 to £12,000 according to the present value of money—were diverted to other uses, whereby the original idea of the king to found at Waltham a cathedral for Essex, and to place Waltham at the head of the proposed new bishoprics, was not carried out. Within the age-crowned walls of the nave—the present church—divine worship has been uninterruptedly celebrated for the long period of 846 years.

In addition to the historical incidents already mentioned it should be remembered that in 1290 the body of Queen Eleanor rested at Waltham Abbey on its way for interment in Westminster Abbey, and that in 1307, for seventeen weeks, the Abbey sheltered the body of her husband, King Edward I., prior to its removal to Westminster. At Waltham, Bishop Joseph Hall, a former incumbent, preached his famous sermons which gained for him the title of 'The English Chrysostom,' and another 17th century incumbent was Thomas Fuller, an eminent divine and historian. John Foxe, the martyrologist, formerly resided at Waltham, where he is said to have partly written his famous book; and in addition to Izaak Walton already mentioned, the literary associations of the place are enriched by the fact that at one time Tennyson resided in the parish, at Beech Hill Park, where, about the year 1837, he wrote his poem 'The talking oak'—of which the opening stanza is given at the beginning of this article—'the moulder'd Abbey-walls' being those of Waltham. In this connection the poet's 'Harold' will be called to mind, and it is said that the thrilling stanzas in Tennyson's masterpiece In Memoriam, beginning 'Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,' were inspired by the sound of the Abbey Church bells as they greeted the dawn of the New Year.

From an architectural, no less than from an ecclesiastical point of view, Waltham Abbey has undergone great changes during its existence of 846 years. The sacred edifice was formerly double or treble its present length by reason of the choir forming its east end. At the dissolution of the monastery the choir was demolished, as was also a central tower which separated the choir from the nave. Between 1556 and 1558 a new tower, the present erection, was built at the west end of the nave—that portion of the building which has always been used as a parish church—with the result that the original west front was deprived of its architectural features. Two years ago this massive west tower was successfully restored, whereby its uppermost stage has been strengthened and greatly improved in appearance. The lady chapel, erected in the 13th or 14th century—the exact date is not known—is on the south side of the church, not at the east end, where it is usually found. After having served the purposes of a schoolroom for many years, the lady chapel was restored in 1876. On removing the bricks from the windows fragments of the former elegant tracery were found, and on taking down the plaster from the east wall, remains of an ancient fresco representing the Last Judgment were discovered.

The interior of the building may be judged from the photograph on the opposite page. Should the visitor remark that the magnificent pillars are like those of Durham Cathedral, the genial vicar will reply, 'Yes, but Durham copied from us'! The easternmost pillars on the north and south sides of the church show the spiral ornament, while two other piers are enriched with the chevron or zig-zag embellishment, as in the northern cathedral. The Rev. J. H. Stamp, in his interesting and informing lectures on the Abbey, says:

The nave consists of seven bays on each side, the mystic number signifying completeness. The clear space of the bays measures 10 feet 3 inches. There are three tiers of arches—nave or arcade, triforium, and clerestory, the three forming one composition—an evident allusion to the doctrine of the Holy Trinity proclaimed by the Apostles, for ancient architects, who were frequently monks, worked out their theological tenets even in the materials which they handled, thus preaching sermons in stones.

Fourteen arches exist in this second stage [triforium], nine being Norman and five Gothic or pointed. The five arches were altered by the architect first engaged by Abbot Reginald at the end of the 13th century, who also most foolishly cut away four of the nave arches, so that there are now only ten in the lower stage (called the arcade) instead of fourteen. In the upper stage or clerestory, sixteen smaller arches rest on twenty-four pillars, nine being Norman and seven pointed.

In 1859-60 the church underwent a complete restoration at a cost of £5,000, under the architectural supervision of the late William Burges. The floor of the church was reduced to its original level; the pillars and walls denuded of their plaster; the Norman windows restored and filled with stained glass; two hideous galleries were removed; and the high-backed pews were replaced by low oak seats. On each side of the Communion Table, and painted on a ground-work of blue, were two curious effigies of Moses and Aaron. Moses was represented as holding a staff, and Aaron in the act of swinging a censer which had a close resemblance to a pepper-box. These two patriarchs and an escutcheon of Charles II.—painted on a large square board at a cost of £24 in 1662—disappeared at the restoration of the Abbey. In regard to other changes then made at the east end, further quotation may be made from Mr. Stamp:

The rough stonework and small window which had been placed under the grand tower arch at the east end were displaced by the present magnificent structure. The rose window depicting the work of Creation, and the Jesse window with three lights, representing patriarchs, kings and prophets, were inserted under the arch. The cartoons for the windows were designed by the famous artist the late Sir Edward Burne-Jones.

It is of special interest to mention that, at the same time (1860), the flat ceiling was painted, after the manner of Peterborough Cathedral, by Sir Edward J. Poynter, Bart., P.R.A., then a rising young artist of twenty-four.

Of the antiquities not previously referred to, mention should be made of the old carved post, dated 1598, which served the double purpose of whipping-post and stocks, and also the pillory. These punishment relics have found a place on the wall of the tower, after having for many years done their duty in the Market Place. The registers date back to 1563; in the churchyard is a quaint old lych-gate and a venerable elm tree measuring twenty-two feet round its base, which, despite its great age of five or six hundred years, still provides 'a shadow from the heat' to those who sit under its branches. And then we must not forget to draw attention to the old Abbey gateway (photograph on p. 595), temp. 1370, which formerly led to the conventual buildings: the armorial bearings of Edward III. may still be discerned on the label of the spring of the great arch on the south side. Inside the church, on the south of the altar, is the monument to Sir Edward Denny (died 1600), who was attached to the court of Queen Elizabeth, one of whose maids of honour he married. His remains were interred in the chancel and his widow erected the fine marble monument shown in the photograph on p. 600. The valiant knight—he fought Queen Elizabeth's battles with Sir Philip Sidney and the poet Spenser as his comrades in arms—is represented, armour clad, lying on his left side, while the recumbent effigy of Lady Denny, who survived her spouse for nearly half a century, is seen below. The six boys and four girls, on the lower part of the monument, are the ten little Dennys saying their prayers.

The reader may be disposed to ask: Are there any musical interests associated with the Abbey Church of Waltham Holy Cross? To this natural interrogation the reply is an emphatic 'Yes,' and one that needs no apology; not that the Abbey can in this respect claim rank with cathedrals and other 'quires and places where they sing,' but by reason of a former organist. But first a few words about the organs. In the 'Inventory of Church Goods, A.D. 1540'—that is at the dissolution of the monastery—we find the following items:

OUR LADY CHAPPELL.—A Table of ymagery of the xij apostells . . . . . x.s.
A lytell payre of organes . . . . . xxs.
IN THE QUYRE.—A greate large payre of Organes above, on the northe of the Quayre, a lesser payre beneath.

It would be very interesting to possess the specifications of these three instruments, especially the 'greate large payre of Organes in the Qyure.' The above entries only refer to the organs belonging to the monastic part—the choir—of the church; but it is interesting to know that early in the 17th century the parishioners of Waltham Abbey sold to the churchwardens of Cheshunt an old organ. This instrument, said to have been constructed by the monks of Waltham, is still preserved at Cheshunt Great House in the neighbouring parish. For nearly a hundred years the church appears to have been without an organ, during which time the services were doubtless accompanied by divers instruments—violin, flute, hautboy, clarinet, bass viol, &c.—the players of which, in consort with enthusiastic singers, made 'a joyful noise unto the Lord.' In the year 1819, one Thomas Leverton presented an organ to the Abbey Church. This instrument, built by Messrs. Flight & Robson and and the pedal organ adding the requisite dignity to the instrument.

The organistship of Waltham Abbey was formerly held by a no less eminent musician than Thomas Tallis, or Tallys, as he signed his name. This interesting fact, unknown to Burney and Hawkins, was discovered about thirty years ago by the late Mr. W. Winters, the historian and antiquary of Waltham, in a document preserved at the Public Record Office. This document, one of those connected with the dissolution of the monastery in 1540, is headed 'Wages and Rewards,' and contains a list of payments to those who were then and there displaced. The fourth name on the list is:

THOMAS TALYS - - - - - xx $\frac{1}{2}$ .; xx $\frac{1}{2}$ .

The payment of xx $\frac{1}{2}$ . for wages was more than the other gifted men connected with the Abbey received, except the priest, and the 'reward' (compensation for loss of office) was equally liberal. In what year Tallis became organist of Waltham Abbey is not known, but he certainly held the post in 1540. It may well be surmised that Henry VIII., a frequent visitor to Waltham, became acquainted with the skilled musicianship of Tallis, and that when his services were no longer required at the Abbey the King appointed him a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. This office Tallis worthily held for forty-five years, serving under four sovereigns—Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, the last named queen having bestowed upon him the additional appointment of organist to Her Majesty's Chapel Royal.

During his organistship at Waltham, or at the dissolution of the monastery, Tallis became the possessor of a valuable manuscript volume, now preserved in the British Museum (Lansdowne MS., No. 763). The last folio of this interesting tome contains the only known autograph of its former owner, 'Thomas Tallys,' written in the ordinary placed in a high gallery at the west end of the building, contained seven stops: open diapason, stopped diapason, principal, fifteenth, sesquialtera and cornet. The absence of pedals may or may not have been compensated in a barrel attachment—'one of the finest of barrels,' according to a local enthusiast—which could play eight tunes. Enlarged and reconstructed by J. W. Walker in 1860, the instrument was removed in 1879 to its present position at the north-east corner of the chancel.

In 1893, the organ, which had been left unfinished, was completed by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, according to the original specification as given below. And here mention must be made of the fine churchlike tone of this organ, the diapasons being of the right quality, rich and devotional, running hand of the period : beneath it the name is re-written in large Roman-shaped characters, to which succeeds the following note :

- xxix. gilt bookes in quarto and octavo.
- x. bookes in folio.
- iii. fayre sets gilt bookes.

This note, which may or may not be in the handwriting of Tallis, possibly refers to other books which came into his possession or that of someone else at the dissolution of the monastery.

And now for a few words about the book itself. The volume bears the following title in rubric :

found in Sir John Hawkins's 'History of Music' (p. 240 et seq., Novello's Edition), but a few extracts of a more or less quaint nature may be given. A discourse on the practice of descant concludes thus :

But who wil ken his gamme [gamut] well, and the imaginations thereof, and of hys accordis, and sette his perfyte accordis wyth his imperfyte accordis, as I have rehersed in thys tretise afore, he may not faile of his conterpoynt in short tyme.

In another essay it is stated that 'the tone and semitone may be very aptly compared to Leah and Rachael' :

For as Jacob was first joined in marriage to Leah, and afterwards to Rachael, thus sound, the element of music, first produces a tone, and afterwards a semitone, and is in some sense married to them. The semitone, from which the symphony of all music principally is generated,

This is followed by the usual anathema found in most early MSS. belonging to religious houses, and imparts no less a curse on any who should steal or injure the book :

Quem quidem librum, vel hunc titulum, qui maliciose abstulerit vel deleverit, anathema sit.

The volume, consisting of 131 folios, is beautifully written on vellum, probably either late in the 14th or early in the 15th century. It seems to have been the work of the said John Wylde, an old-time precentor of Waltham Abbey, the bearer of a name unknown in the musical world except as the author, compiler, or transcriber of this book. It contains a curious olla podrida of learning—scientific, religious, heraldic, astronomical and musical. Copious quotations therefrom will be as it tempers the rigour and asperity of the tones, may aptly be assigned to Rachael, who chiefly captivated the heart of Jacob, as she had a beautiful face and graceful aspect.

Some verses of St. Bernard (12th century) are quoted, these having reference to the disgraceful manner in which the Psalms were sung. The old monk calls the chanters 'jangers cum jappers,' (probably those who sing too quickly and irreverently), 'nappers and galpers' (sleepers and yawners), 'drawers' (drawlers), 'skippers, overenners and overhippers' (those who skip over the words). Are not some of these terms of St. Bernard applicable to psalm chanters of the present day? Before leaving this old MS. volume we must not forget to mention that at one time it was in the possession, either as his own book or as a loan, of Thomas Morley, who largely availed himself of a portion of its contents in his 'Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practicall Musicke,' first published in 1597.

To return to the organists of Waltham. It appears that there was a second organist at the time of the dissolution in the person of John Boston, a Waltham man. He died sometime before the year 1564, as his wife, who died 'a widow,' was buried January 30, 1564, and there are several other entries in the parish registers of the Boston family. At the dissolution of the monastery

Waltham and the bearer of a name that achieved fame terpsichorean rather than in ecclesiastical music. Mr. Coote's tenure of office lasted only one year, when a competition took place and a Miss Thompson was elected to the office. This lady suffered so much from ill-health that she was unable to officiate for some years. Several organists were engaged to discharge the duties that Miss Thompson could not perform. In this connection we may quote from a very interesting pamphlet containing a letter from the then vicar (the Rev. James Francis) to his

THE TOMB OF SIR EDWARD DENNY (DIED 1600).

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. G. F. S. Chalk.)

John Boston received the sum of 6s.—as against the sum of 40s. paid to Tallis—for his 'wages and reward'; and he had previously been paid the sum of 20*d.* 'for mending the organs.' Mr. Boston may have played the 'lytell payre of organes' in the lady chapel, while Tallis officiated at the 'greate large payre of Organes' in the choir.

The first organist who officiated at the Flight & Robson organ, erected in 1819, was a Mr. Coote, one of a musical family, natives of parishioners, which preludes some particulars of the various parochial institutions. It is dated Easter, 1849, and contains the following reference to the #### ORGAN FUND.

In May, 1848, at the instance of many persons who felt a great and proper interest in the subject, the following circular was addressed to members of the congregation. 'As it is highly desirable that the Praises of God in the Church should be sung in the most appropriate and devotional manner, and that the whole congregation should have the opportunity of joining in them, an endeavour has been made to further this object. In accordance, therefore, with the wishes of a large proportion of our congregation, the services of a gentleman connected with the Temple Church, and having excellent testimonials, have been engaged, whose assistance may be retained through the liberality of members of the congregation.*

Parsonage, Waltham Abbey, May, 1848.

This suggestion was so well received, that very soon a sufficient sum of money was contributed to retain for a year the services of the gentleman above referred to. It was felt by all, and especially by those who first moved in the matter, that no arrangement whatever ought to be allowed to interfere with the interests of the organist who had fulfilled the duties of her station for so many years. At the discretion of the minister and churchwardens, and with the permission of the vestry, she has been assisted in her duties, an arrangement which has been undoubtedly a great relief to her under her severe bodily suffering.

The 'gentleman connected with the Temple Church and having excellent testimonials,' referred to by the worthy vicar, was a youth named William Hayman Cummings, now Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, who at the age of seventeen became one of the successors of Thomas Tallis in the organistship of Waltham Abbey. Moreover, it was at this old church that the young organist, more than half a century ago, adapted Mendelssohn's music to Charles Wesley's hymn 'Hark! the herald angels sing.' The young organist eagerly procured everything that Mendelssohn composed directly it was published. While playing over the Festgesang chorus (in G), he was at once struck by its adaptability to the familiar Christmas hymn. He copied out the parts, and the tune was sung with great enthusiasm by the congregation of Waltham Abbey before it had found its way into any other churches, not to say hymnals.*

Mr. Joseph Chalk, the present organist, was appointed in 1859. At that time the organ was in an upper gallery at the west end of the church. He gave his first recitals there, on the enlarged and reconstructed organ by Walker, on June 5 and 8, 1860, and as the organ had been opened only a month previously, he did not lose much time in getting used to the C pedal board.

Mr. Chalk has kindly supplied the following notes on the music of the church at which he has officiated for nearly half-a-century:

Going back to the time of Mr. (now Dr.) Cummings, none of the organists who came after him stayed any length of time. The lady organist (Miss Thompson) received her salary until a little more than a year before her death, and I found it recorded at a meeting of the vestry that on a proposition that she should continue to receive it for another year, only two votes were recorded in favour of the recommendation.

In 1850 Mr. J. W. Walker added to the organ a tenor C swell of four stops, viz.: open diapason, stopped diapason, principal, and hautboy, and an octave and a half of pedals which pulled down the keys. This was the organ, reopened by Hopkins, of the Temple, I found here in January, 1858. On either side of the instrument were seated the boys and girls of the Leverton School, and behind the organ seat was a pew large enough for a few men, who, with the school children formed the choir. The music was in a bad state and the congregational singing was of the poorest kind. I came here on the recommendation of John Hullah to form singing classes in the parish. I also played at the children's and other special services, and superintended the music in all of the schools at that period, so that I have been connected with the musical life of the Abbey for more than forty-eight years. I had permission to practise on the organ, and when the post fell vacant at the end of 1858, I discharged the duties and have played regularly since January, 1859, and at the Easter vestry of that year I was appointed organist. Soon after, the work of restoration of the Abbey began, and with it, in the autumn of 1859, the demolition of the galleries and pews. Although the parish had been scoured for funds for the church I made an effort to improve the organ. My vicar (the Rev. James Francis) gave me assistance, and a good friend, one Colonel Edenborough—to whose memory the reredos was erected—set me going with a donation of £100. I managed to raise with the help of friends £280, whereby the organ was greatly improved, a new CC swell, an open diapason on pedal, &c., being added. The reopening services were held on May 3, 1870, the 800th anniversary of the consecration of Harold's church. On that occasion the music was under the direction of Dr. (then Mr.) W. H. Cummings, with myself at the organ, and the anthems included Boyce's 'I have surely built Thee an house,' and Purcell's 'O sing unto the Lord.'

Later on the choir was placed in the chancel, but as the Leverton school children still occupied the gallery, great difficulties arose in securing unanimity. To remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs my then vicar decided to place an additional small organ in the chancel. This excellent one-manual instrument, built by Walker at a cost of £200, had eight stops, all—except the open diapason and the pedal bourdon—enclosed in a swell box: open diapason, stopped diapason, dulciana, principal, flute, oboe (to tenor C), mixture and bourdon (pedal). This organ was dispensed with when the large (gallery) organ was placed in the chancel in 1879.

When I came here in 1858 the Psalms were not chanted. The first time they were sung was at an ordination service on July 3, 1864. As we had no psalters, I pointed an ordinary Prayer Book for the occasion.

* See THE MUSICAL TIMES, December, 1897, p. 810; and February, 1898, p. 81.

When Novello's 'Cathedral Psalter' was issued we used that, and I was then saved the trouble of pointing any more prayer-books. For some time the Psalms were chanted only on special occasions, and later on at the evening services only, but since 1885—when the Rev. F. B. Johnston, the present vicar, was appointed—they have been sung at every service. Let me conclude by saying that our congregational service is one which many parishes might envy, most gratifying to listen to and pleasant to accompany.

For kind help in the preparation of this article the writer is indebted to the Rev. F. B. Johnston, M.A., vicar of Waltham Abbey Church; to the Rev. J. Henry Stamp, curate (to whose writings on the subject reference has already been made); and to Mr. Joseph Chalk, organist and choirmaster; also to the photographers whose names appear under their respective photographs.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

A FORGOTTEN CONCERT ROOM.

Modern London is becoming a new Americanised city, and all its old and peculiarly English characteristics are fast being improved out of existence. If any one who left it during the sixties of the last century return to visit it to-day, he will imagine himself to be in some foreign town, and for the most part fail to recognise the London he knew so intimately of old. The comparatively narrow streets with their respectable if ugly houses have become broad thoroughfares lined with enormous blocks of buildings five or six stories high, and the whole of many well-remembered districts have been completely swept away. He will look in vain for his old landmarks. In the Strand and Fleet Street he will miss Temple-Bar and Holywell Street, and if he turn westward to Piccadilly Circus he will be no better off. Other streets and blocks of houses have disappeared, and in the middle of the great open space remaining, the winged figure over the fountain may stand for the mocking spirit of Modern Progress shooting arrows of scorn at the memories of the past.

The wanderer may be a lover of music and desire to revisit the concert-rooms where in his young days he spent so many happy hours. He will not find them. Exeter Hall still stands, but it is now occupied by the Young Men's Christian Association. On the site of the Hanover Square Rooms is a great block of flats with shops beneath them; and as the traveller walks down Regent Street he sees a hideous gap in the stately curve of the quadrant, and realises with dismay that St. James's Hall, formerly the most perfect concert room in Europe, has utterly vanished after an existence of more than half a century to make room for a new hotel.

It is a long while since fashion began its pompous westward march from London City to its present resting-places in Mayfair and Kensington, through Gray's Inn, Bloomsbury, and Soho, and in the melancholy remains of these old neighbourhoods traces of their former grandeur may still be found. In a narrow, dingy street, once of considerable repute, barely a stone's throw from Regent Street, stand three old Georgian houses side by side. Plainly built of red brick, they have no architectural pretensions. All three are worthy of respect for the sake of their former inhabitants; but the easternmost is of more than common interest, especially to musicians, for it contains an ancient concert-room that alone of all such places of entertainment has been left to us from the 18th century. Carlisle House, the Great Room in Dean Street, Soho, and the Music Room in Spring Gardens, exist no longer, and the same fate has attended Almack's and the Pantheon, where the concerts and assemblies were so exclusive that great ladies intrigued to gain admission to them. But the long-forgotten old concert-room in Brewer Street has fortunately escaped demolition, and it recalls a chapter of London's musical history little noticed by the general reader. The building now forms part of the premises of the Club Français, but for thirty-five years during the middle of the 18th century it was a much-frequented and fashionable resort, and was known by the name of Hickford's Room.

John Hickford, the proprietor, began life as a dancing-master in the latter part of Queen Anne's reign, and originally had a dancing school in James Street, Haymarket. There was at that time only one other room in the West-end large enough for concerts of any pretensions, and as that was sometimes difficult to secure and its proprietor was not a particularly agreeable man, certain well-known artists began to make use of Mr. Hickford's great dancing-room wherein to give their concerts. The situation was so convenient that the worthy dancing-master found himself besieged with applications for the use of his room, and, being a man of accommodating disposition, his dancing-school soon became the recognized concert-room of the day. Mr. Hickford must also have had a talent for organization, for he quickly acquired a reputation as a concert agent. So successful was he in this capacity that after some years he decided to move into a still more fashionable quarter, and accordingly took up his abode in a fine new house in Brewer Street, or as it was then called, Brewer's Street. Here he was in the best of company, for his next door neighbours were my Lord Mansfield and the Spanish Ambassador.

It may be presumed that the house was designed and built specially for Mr. Hickford, as it is still easy to see how conveniently it was arranged for the use he made of it. The front door opened into a square hall, through which the company proceeded to the concert room built out at the back, and a staircase gave access to a small gallery. Though dignified by the title 'Great,' in common with other music-rooms of the period, Hickford's room is not actually of large size, being only about fifty feet in length and some thirty feet in width. But its proportions are excellent; the ceiling is coved, and the mouldings, cornices, and other decorations are in the simple, elegant style that the brothers Adam improved upon and made their own many years later. This beautiful room appears to have remained so unchanged since it was first built that it seems still pervaded by the mental atmosphere of its original days. And it is so quiet, that to stand therein on a dull afternoon, hearing nothing but a few distant street cries and the low, ceaseless roar of the traffic in the busier streets, is to be at once transported to that old, peaceful time when life moved more slowly and with more dignity and elegance than now. It needs but little imagination to fill the room with a gay, distinguished company, all airs and graces and rustling silks and rippling laughter, and to call up on to the low platform a shadowy procession of the famous men and women who, with skilled hands and voices, moved to applause and wonder and sometimes to tears the frivolous crowd for whose diversion they were employed. Some of these shadows are but names to us, others have left behind them undying records of their art in works which, if they have ceased to astonish, have still the power to charm and delight.

It is a long procession of men, women, and children, and the familiar faces of some seem to emerge with startling clearness from that misty past. Among the earliest is a tall, thin man, well dressed in velvet and fur, and with ruffles of delicate lace. He is not ill-looking in spite of his long nose and somewhat contemptuous mouth. He composes, and his wife who is with him sings, the gay and tuneful music that even to-day carries with it the echo of her fresh young voice. A tenor singer of noble presence and dignified demeanour thrills the shadowy audience with his wonderful voice. 'Love in her eyes sits playing, and sheds delicious death.' Did John Beard sing that entrancing song to the beautiful woman who gave him fourteen happy years of married life? What delicate music the ghostly players draw from their instruments. The tinkle of the harpsichord, the sighing of the viols, the plaintive pipings of the wood-wind instruments sound faint and thin to modern ears. Loud music was not always wanting in the old days, for the room often resounded with solos and concertos for trumpets and French horns, a testimony to the nerves, or want of nerves, of 18th century audiences.

The children are strange little figures, quaint copies of their elders in dress and deportment, with staid, formal manners. One small girl plays the flute, thereby evoking much applause. The ladies make much of her, tap her cheek with their fans and call her 'sweet miss'; the gentlemen ogle her, and declare the performance 'monstrous fine.' Two other little shadows, brother and sister, play the harpsichord. The boy is eight years old, the girl thirteen, a demure, motherly child, her hair crowned by a mob-cap. The boy's playing is phenomenal, and he bids fair to rival Mr. Handel in composition. But the scanty audience is not interested, it cares no longer for these two children who only a year ago were the spoiled darlings of the whole town. The little boy fulfilled in manhood the brilliant promise of his youth, and London should be proud that it still possesses a room once distinguished by the performance of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

This house, however, was built long before the days of Mozart, probably about 1737 or 1738, and Mr. Hickford settled himself into it at some time during the latter year. Whether he continued to give dancing lessons there is not recorded; the probability is against it, for excepting an occasional ball such as took place at the theatres or some of the other public rooms, there is no mention of dancing in connection with Mr. Hickford and his 'new' Great Room in Brewer Street. The weekly subscription concerts originated by Geminiani seven years previously in the old rooms were announced to take place in the new room on Thursday evenings as usual, and great care was taken that only a very select company should be admitted to them. There were twenty concerts during the season, beginning in December and ending in April, and the subscription was four guineas, each subscriber receiving a silver ticket of admission. Owing perhaps to the rather limited accommodation, people who wished to take friends to those concerts could only do so under certain conditions. They were informed that 'any subscriber by sending the silver ticket may have two printed ones which will admit either gentlemen or ladies paying five shillings each. But no other person to be admitted without a subscriber's ticket under half-a-guinea.' A very pleasant set of concerts must this have been, and the performers, who were of the best, were engaged for the whole season. Festing was leader of the band, Mrs. Arne the chief singer, and solos and concertos on the violoncello were contributed by the famous Caporale. After the first season in the new room the subscription night was changed from Thursday to Friday, and for many years these concerts continued among the chief attractions of the London winter season.

The first benefit concert recorded as having taken place here was given by Valentine Snow, the well-known trumpet player, early in February, 1739. In addition to playing 'Particularly two pieces on the Trumpet' himself, he promised his patrons 'A Concerto on the Organ by Mr. Gladwin, and several Chorus's out of Acis and Galatea, Alexander's Feast, and Coronation Anthems.' The Arnes gave a concert in the following March, described as a 'Grand Entertainment of Musick, with Singing by Mrs. Arne.' Among other things she sang 'Would you taste the Noontide Air, a favourite song in the Masque of Comus.' This work, composed by Arne in the previous year, had established his reputation among musicians and with the public; and, beautiful music though it is, there can be no doubt that the brilliant singing of his charming wife contributed not a little to its success.

If Mr. Hickford's old room had been popular, his new one became much more so. It was at once accepted as quite the proper place for all good concerts, and every season the musical entertainments given there increased in number and variety. Many new works were introduced from time to time at the weekly subscription concerts, and about 1740 a form of composition styled a 'Musical Dramatick Poem' came into fashion. One called 'Proteus' attracted much attention and was performed on several consecutive Fridays, and in 1741 a similar composition in honour of the Prince of Wales's birthday was largely advertised and formed the pièce de resistance for no fewer than three concerts. It is difficult to-day to see wherein lay the attraction of this poem. It is written in the stilted, artificial style of that time and is full of the usual classical terms and allusions. Every year saw a fresh crop of these poems and odes addressed to Royalty on special occasions. They were generally first performed before the King, Queen, and Court circle in the drawing room at St. James's Palace, and very frequently afterwards appeared in the weekly programmes at Hickford's Room. It must have been a great relief after such dull entertainments to have a concert of some lighter music such as one given in 1744 with 'The Vocal Parts by Sig. Palma, Sig. Rochetti, and Sig. Fratistanti, who particularly will sing some songs composed by the Best Masters in Italy in Comic Style. And amongst the rest of the Songs will be performed for the first Time in publick the famous Cantata called Orpheus seeking after Eurydice, composed by the late Signor Pergolesi.' The names of the comic songs do not appear. Perhaps among them was included Pergolesi's famous 'Tre Giorni,' so often since sung by amateurs as a serious love song, instead of in the mocking style demanded by both words and music. 'Acis and Galatea, composed by Mr. Handel,' was a very favourite work with the public and was given several times at Hickford's Room. Miss Oldmixon selected it for her benefit in 1749, when the vocal parts were rendered by herself, Signora Galli, John Beard, and Mr. Reinhold, 'With all the Chorusses.' The occasion was also of special interest from the promise that 'The Performance will be conducted by Mr. Dubourg who will also play a Solo.' The great violinist had recently returned to England after his long residence in Dublin, to find that his playing could still attract and astonish the London public that had not forgotten the wonderful performance of his youth. 'Acis and Galatea' was again performed some years later 'for the Benefit of the Sister of the late Robert Hiller of Westminster Abbey.' Mr. Hiller was possibly one of the vicars-choral, and as the concert was somewhat in the nature of a charity, the profession rose to the occasion and issued the following notice: 'The Public may be assured that Justice will be done to this excellent Composition, as the capital Performers in England have generously engaged their Assistance on this Occasion.'

Some of the Infant Prodigies of the 18th century made their first appearance before the public at Hickford's Room, and among them little Miss Davies, who played both the harpsichord and German flute. She was only seven years old when she gave her first concert, and she played a flute concerto of her own composition, the principal flute in a 'Full Piece for two German Flutes, French Horns, Trumpets, &c., a solo on the flute accompanied by French horns, and a Concerto of Mr. Handel's on the Harpsichord.' The list of artists both English and foreign who made their first appearance at Hickford's is a long one, containing several names well known in the annals of music, and many a successful career was begun on that low platform. But from time to time the room has been the scene of the sad occasion of the last appearance of old favourites, compelled by age or ill-health to take leave of the public whom they have served so long and who forget them so easily. One of the most pathetic of these farewell occasions was that on which Cuzzoni made her final appeal to a London audience when she visited England for the last time in 1751. During her early days she had an immense vogue at the opera, though her hasty temper made it difficult for her to get on with the other singers. After many years of success in London she went back to the Continent, where she squandered her money, and at last, no longer young, she determined once more to try her fortune with the rich English. That the musical profession rallied round her may be seen from the following announcement of May 23, 1751:

Signor Angelo Morigi, Mr. Miller, Mr. Beneki, and the Rest of the Performers having, in Compassion to my Distresses, generously promised to perform Gratis, enables me to give the following Entertainment for my Benefit This Day at Mr. Hickford's in Brewer Street.

PART I.

- The 3d Concerto of Mr. Geminiani's 2d Op.
- Affanni del Pensier by Signora Cuzzoni.
- A Song by Signor Guadani.
- A Concerto on the Bassoon by Mr. Miller.
- A Solo on the Violin by Sig. Angelo Morigi.
- Falsa Immagine by Signora Cuzzoni.
- 6th Concerto of Mr. Geminiani's 3d Op.

PART II.

- Violin Concerto by Sig. Angelo Morigi.
- Return, O God of Hosts, by Signora Cuzzoni.
- Song by Sig. Palma.
- Salve Regina, by Signora Cuzzoni.
- 5th of Mr. Handel's Grand Concertos.
- Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had at Mr. Hickford's.

I am so extremely Sensible of the Many Obligations I have already received from the Nobility and Gentry of This Kingdom (for which I sincerely return my most humble Thanks) that nothing but extreme Necessity and a Desire of doing Justice, could induce me to trouble them again, but being unhappily involved in a few Debts, am extremely desirous of attempting every thing in my Power to pay them before I quit England; therefore take the Liberty most humbly to intreat them once more to repeat their well known Generosity and Goodness, and to honour me with their Presence at this Benefit, which shall be the last I will ever trouble them with, and is made solely to pay my Creditors; and to convince the World of my Sincerity herein, I have prevailed on Mr. Hickford to receive the Money, and to pay it to them.

*I am, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your very much obliged, and devoted humble servant,*

F. CUZZONI.

The poor old singer met with but little success in spite of her piteous appeal and the generous support of the well-known artists whose names appear in her programme. She had already made various attempts during that season to retrieve her fallen fortunes, singing at other concerts at Hickford's Room and at the New Theatre in the Haymarket, where Guadagni gave his own benefit 'For the Profit of Signora Cuzzoni': but her voice was worn and thin, no one cared to hear her, and she passes from the concert-room a melancholy shadow into the heavy mists of poverty and obscurity.

As time went on Society, ever seeking fresh diversions, began to play at being learned, and was seized with a craze for attending lectures on various subjects, literary, artistic, political, social, and scientific. Thomas Sheridan, famous father of a still more famous son, had just taken up the teaching of elocution as a fresh means of earning a livelihood, and among his earliest ventures in this direction was a course of lectures given at Hickford's Room. A man so well known in town, of such high literary attainments and the friend of Dr. Johnson, could not fail to secure a good attendance for his lectures, especially as the study of literature and the art of reading aloud were becoming fashionable among the ladies.

One May morning in 1761, therefore, the town was informed that:

Mr. Sheridan's Course of Lectures on Elocution, will commence on Monday the 18th Instant at Hickford's Concert Room in Brewer Street. It will consist of Eight Lectures. Four of which he proposes to deliver in Each Week on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, and to begin precisely at One o'clock Each Day. By Desire he will read some piece of Poetry or Prose, after each Lecture; the poetic Passages chiefly from Milton and Dryden: and amongst the prosaic Pieces he will deliver a Sermon of Dr. Swift's, and another of the Rev. Mr. Sterne's.

Proposals at large to be had and Subscriptions received at Mr. Millar's, in the Strand; Mr. Dodsley's, in Pall Mall; Mr. Wilkie's, in St. Paul's Church-Yard; Mr. Davies's, in Russel Street, Covent Garden; and at Tom's Coffee House, Devereux Court, Temple Bar.

That the lectures were a success and gained Mr. Sheridan many distinguished pupils can hardly be doubted. Hickford's Room was still the resort of the 'Quality' and any new venture was sure to be largely patronised if only from curiosity. Mr. Sheridan had to repeat his lectures in other parts of the town, and his fine presence and beautiful voice soon gained him fame in his new calling. He appears to have confined himself strictly to his lectures on these occasions; but some years later an elocutionary display of a different kind was given here by John Lee the actor, celebrated for his adaptations of plays and for his quarrels with Garrick. He was one of those unfortunate persons who always have a grievance, and who find it necessary to pose as being misunderstood on account of their originality. In addition to his acting, he made a great feature of readings from Milton, and in 1772 he advertised an entertainment that should not only allow him to show off his talent as a professor of elocution, but should be different from any previous kind of diversion offered to the public!

His prospectus is worth quoting in full:

Jan. 30th [1772].

Hickford's Room in Brewer Street.

A New Entertainment is prepared for Exhibition, in which the Powers of Music, Poetry and Elocution will be united in several select pieces of Imagery from MILTON.

First Composition, To-morrow the 31st Instant, between the Parts of a Grand Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music, will be delivered by Mr. Lee, a short introductory Discourse, with an Ode upon the Passions; illustrated by the Invocation at the Beginning of Paradise Lost and by the Description of the Fall of Satan with the Rebel Angels, to be Spoken and Sung.

Second Composition. At the same Place on Thursday the 6th of February, between the Parts of a Grand Concert of Music, will be continued the Discourse upon the Powers of Poetry, Elocution, &c., illustrated by Milton's description of the Evening and Morning, with the Hymn sung by Adam and Eve at the Entrance of their Bower.

Note: The Airs and Chorusses (which are mostly new, and have been composed solely for these Illustrations) will be supported by a proper number of Voices and Instruments. The doors will be opened at Six, the Performance will begin precisely at Seven o'clock, and the Whole will be concluded about the usual time of resorting to the Pantheon.

At that time the Pantheon had only very lately been opened, and by the splendour of its numerous rooms and magnificence of the entertainments eclipsed almost every other place of amusement in London. Mr. Lee, therefore, doubtful in any case perhaps of a large attendance at his discourse, was exceedingly careful to assure his patrons that his 'New Entertainment' should in no way interfere with their enjoyment of the more luxurious pleasures and enticing gaieties offered by the directors of the Pantheon. He was wise on this account, too, in choosing Hickford's Room for his performances, for Brewer Street is but a short distance from Oxford Street. His auditors, therefore, having performed their moral and intellectual duty by listening to Milton's lofty verse, joyfully set off, a gay procession of chairs and coaches, to the spacious hall and gaily-lighted rooms of the Pantheon, where they danced, played cards, flirted, intrigued, sipped their tea and chocolate, and made mischief among their friends. The 'School for Scandal' was so true a picture of its time that it is no wonder it was at first forbidden by the Lord Chamberlain to be represented on the stage.

BERTHA HARRISON.

The long story of the development of music is a continuous and unbroken record of human effort to extend and enhance the possibilities of effects of sound upon human sensibilities, as representing in a formal or a direct manner the expression of man's inner being. The efforts resolve themselves mainly into impulses to find means to produce the effect of design, and to contrive types of expression which are capable of being adapted to such designs. And as the difficulty of coping with two things at once is considerable, men have generally concentrated their efforts on design at one time, and on expression at another.—Sir Hubert Parry in 'The Evolution of the art of Music.'

King Richard.—Music do I hear?

Ha, ha! keep time :—How sweet sour music is
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disord'd string;
But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.

SHAKESPEARE.

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of fifty years ago—
September, 1856:

MENDELSSOHN SCHOLARSHIP. — The successful candidate is Master Arthur Seymour Sullivan, a chorister of Her Majesty's Chapels Royal, fourteen years old. There were twenty competitors.

At what age does a composer bring forth his best work? This question is a difficult one to answer, and opinions may differ as to what should be regarded as the best work of this or that composer. As an attempt to find some solution of the question, we have compiled the following table, setting forth the eleven composers in chronological order, and giving their ages at death:

Name.	Representative work.	Com- posed at the age of	Age at death.
Bach	B minor Mass -	48	65
Handel	Messiah - -	56	74
Haydn	Creation - -	65	77
Mozart	Don Giovanni -	31	35 (nearly 36)
Beethoven	C minor symphony	35-38	56
Weber	Der Freyschütz -	30-33	39
Schubert	C major symphony	31	31 (nearly 32)
Mendelssohn	Elijah - - -	37	38
Schumann	Pianoforte concerto	31-35	46
Wagner	Die Meistersinger -	49-54	69
Brahms	Requiem - - -	32-35	63 (nearly 64)

Except in the instances of Beethoven, Schubert, and Schumann, the representative works that have been selected are those combining orchestra and chorus, and no one will deny that they are masterpieces. The omission of Wagner's 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' is necessitated by the length of time covered by its conception and its full fruition; and in five cases the representative work was on the stocks for various periods. The result of the analysis shows that between the ages of thirty and forty is a good time for productiveness; and yet composers who, like some non-composing folk, think that they are 'too old at forty,' may take courage in the creative output of Bach, Wagner, Handel, and Haydn, at the respective ages of forty-eight, forty-nine to fifty-four, fifty-six, and sixty-five, especially when that output included such monumental works as the B minor Mass, 'Die Meistersinger,' 'The Messiah,' and 'The Creation.' The above table, alas! also brings home to us the fact that four of the chosen masters—Mozart, Weber, Schubert, and Mendelssohn—died before they had reached their fortieth year. And this fact naturally suggests the question: What might each of these have done to enrich the world's music had they lived as long as, say, Bach, Wagner, Handel, or Haydn?

In accordance with our annual custom, we give some extracts from the British Museum Report for the year ending March 31, as contained in the recently-issued Blue Book. During the year no fewer than 8,222 musical publications were added to the national library. Of these, 7,305 were received under the provisions of the Copyright Act; 580 by Colonial Copyright; and 337 were acquired by purchase. As this total (8,222) exceeds that of the previous Report by 1,288 publications, musical composition is considerably on the increase. But what of the quality? The most interesting additions to the collection of printed music are thus stated:

Monte, Filippo di: 'Secondo Libro di Madrigali spirituali a sei Voci.' Venice, 1589.

Dering, Richard, Organist to Queen Henrietta Maria: 'Cantiones Sacrae quinque Vocum.' Antwerp, 1634.

Abell, John: 'A Choice Collection of Italian Ayres.' London, 1703.

Richardson, William: 'Lessons for the Harpsichord.' London, 1708.

Meyerbeer, Giacomo: 'A copy of the full-score of 'L'Africaine,' 1865.

Musical literature has been enriched by Mrs. J. Henniker-Heaton's gift of a huge tome thus described:

Richard Wagner. Engraved throughout by Mr. Allan Wyon for the Honourable Mrs. Burrell on specially manufactured paper, with watermark facsimile of Richard Wagner's autograph signature. One hundred copies only printed.

The Department of MSS. has acquired, among others, the following treasures:

Vocal and instrumental compositions, in score, by the Rev. R. Creyghton, D.D.; 1727.

'Recueil de Vaudevilles,' &c., in score; 1728.

Musical in 'The Tempest,' &c., by H. Purcell, with compositions by Tallis, Blow, Pelham Humfrey, and others; 18th cent.

'Come let us agree,' treble part, by H. Purcell; 18th cent.

Peal-book of the London Society of bell-ringers known as the 'Junior Cumberland Youths'; 1784-1824.

Autograph MS. of Robert Schumann's [Pianoforte] Sonata in F minor (Op. 14); 1836.

'Love's Triumph,' autograph opera by W. Vincent Wallace, in full score; 1862.

Autograph drafts of compositions, vocal and instrumental, by John Liptrot Hatton; 1869-1870.

Among the portraits added to the Department of Prints and Drawings is a mezzo-tint, after J. Downman, of William Jackson, of Exeter, composer of the Te Deum in F associated with his name; and classified under 'Ethnography of Asia' (British and Mediæval Antiquities) are two musical instruments:

A handsome specimen of the stringed instrument known as Vina, from Southern India.

A nose-flute from the Loi aborigines of Hainan, China.

The number of 'Readers' has diminished by 11,383, the numbers being:

1904	-	-	-	226,323
1905	-	-	-	214,940
				11,383

Notwithstanding this falling off, the attendance averages 711 readers per day. The fact that all the provincial newspapers, including those issued in Scotland and Ireland—in all 48,000 volumes!—have been removed to Hendon is a natural source of regret to those who have occasion to consult these invaluable sources of information; but in this matter, as in all else, the never-failing courtesy of the Reading Room officials helps to modify an obvious inconvenience to those engaged in serious research work.

Centenaries serve a useful and profitable purpose in reviving the memories of those who have passed into the shadows. One hundred years ago—on September 24, 1806, at Limerick—George Alexander Osborne made his entry into the world. Those who knew this polished, genial, witty, Irish musician will recall pleasant memories of the charming personality of this friend of Chopin and Berlioz. In the early days of the Musical Association Mr. Osborne frequently enlivened the Proceedings by his remarks in the capacity of lecturer, chairman, and speaker in discussions. For instance, an interesting autobiographical paper on Berlioz which he read contained the following reference to Miss Harriet Smithson, afterwards the wife of the great French composer :

Miss Smithson was much admired and sought after. I remember being at a public ball [at Paris], and while walking with her leaning on my arm, we were stopped by Mlle. George, the great French tragedian, who took my other arm, making me look like an urn with two handles as we paced up and down the room. Many were the winks and nods I received ; one gentleman loudly remarking, 'Look at that monopoliser of tragedy.'

Of a more serious nature was his reference to Berlioz at St. Paul's Cathedral, at the annual service of the 'Charity children in 1851. On that occasion Osborne and Berlioz—vested in surplices!—both sang in the choir, when the impressionable French composer was 'dissolved in tears.' Berlioz said to his Irish friend : 'Never during the whole course of my life has music affected me in the same way as the singing in unison of those children.'

In the course of an interesting paper entitled 'Reminiscences of Frederick Chopin,' whom he knew so well during his residence in Paris, Mr. Osborne said :

Residing close by Chopin's residence, I was a frequent visitor, and had the advantage of hearing him play his compositions when still in manuscript. Even when published he would introduce fioritures, always varying them when repeated with new embroideries, according to the fancy of the moment. In bravura passages he would sing out as loud as he could, occasionally exclaiming, 'This will require force and dash,' evidently having Liszt in his mind.

A capital specimen of Osborne's humour is found in an interesting paper he read on 'Musical coincidences and reminiscences.' Here it is—one of his amusing 'reminiscences' :

Meeting with old Lablache one day on my arrival in London from Paris, I was surprised at his greeting me with 'Bon jour, Madame Dubrac.' In vain I told him that I did not know what he meant, but he said, 'Oh ! yes, you do ; however, if your memory fails you, ask De Beriot.' After a little reflection, I remembered the circumstance to which he alluded, but did not know that it was made public, and certainly any pleasure it afforded to Lablache's friends must have been entirely due to his great gift of story telling. You shall have it as a plain, unvarnished tale.

On a visit with De Beriot, he being then an unmarried man, we occupied a double-bedded room, and on the morning of our departure for Paris I was much engaged and had scarcely time to close my portmanteau, which during a temporary absence remained open in our room. On my return I put in a few remaining things, and we started for Boulogne-sur-Mer, where we arrived in the afternoon. As usual, our trunks were opened for examination, to see if we had anything liable to duty. When my turn came, I was asked to pay for a half-dozen pairs of stockings. I was astonished, and, having the warmth of an Irishman improved by a residence in France, I asked if the government expected I should wear my boots without stockings. The chief examiner was then called, who very politely asked my name, which I gave him in rather an excited manner. He then said, 'Excuse me, sir, you are Madame Dubrac ; how do you account for it ?' As I could not account for it—how could I?—I hurriedly said that I supposed it was a name given to me in my baptism. The examiner laughed, made me a bow, and shut up my portmanteau. The next morning in Paris, when arranging my things, I took from the bottom of my trunk six pairs of fine long stockings, marked Madame Dubrac, an old friend of mine and De Beriot, which he placed there unknown to me, and my ignorance of this fact was the cause of the anecdote so embellished by our mutual friend Lablache.

An incident which befel Osborne during his travels in the Holy Land is told in his most graphic manner : the extract is from a paper he read on 'The emotional aspects of poetry, painting, and music' :

As regards primitive music, I had an opportunity when travelling in the East of hearing some remarkable specimens. I will ask you to accompany me a short distance through the desert from the banks of the Jordan to modern Jericho, which consists of a group of squalid huts containing about sixty families. After a couple of hours' rest we mounted our horses, and off they went at a fearful gallop. Mine, which was an Arab steed, came in first, for which I got great credit. Now I don't mind telling you, in strict confidence, that my earnest desire was to come in last, for I felt very uncomfortable, being obliged to hold on my hat with my left hand while pulling as hard as I could with the right ; but all to no purpose, the beast would be first, and I had to receive most unmerited hearty congratulations. These poor blacks in Jericho appear to be a degenerate race, as the hot and unhealthy climate has an enervating effect on them. After supper we were summoned to witness a war dance. About twenty men and women, headed by their Princess holding a sword over her head, were ranged before us. One of the women, who was renowned for having the shrillest voice of the company, was ordered to whisper something to each of us, which she did with a vengeance. It would be impossible to describe the effect of her high soprano on the ear. She screamed on a top shrill note, 'Quacky, quacky, quacky,' the meaning of which words I am unable to give you, but they were very flattering, as I was informed. The war-dance now commenced with a chorus accompaniment, men and women clapping their hands and singing the following, 'Jaya ve, jaya doodley.' This musical phrase was taken up higher and higher with an appalling crescendo that, as we should term it, brought down the house ; indeed, these poor blacks would have gone on till midnight had they not been requested to retire ; and I feel persuaded that had they heard the most pleasing chorus, as we understand one, it would not have given them the pleasure they derived from 'Jaya ve, jaya doodley.' I have given you as nearly as possible the two bars I heard, but when I sung them, which I did after they had finished, it was evident that my rendering of 'Jaya ve' was not appreciated, for they looked unutterable things, seeming to be of unanimous opinion that music was not my vocation, therefore I failed to convey to them their emotional and sympathetic associations. When we come to consider that the Arab scale is divided into eighteen intervals instead of twelve, we can easily imagine that any European notation of Arab music must be at the best a mere approximation. Whenever I hear singing out of tune, and that sometimes happens, I invariably look on the vocalist as being acquainted with the Arab scale. Next morning the chief, a man jet black, with very thick lips and only one enormous front tooth, attended by his prime minister, accompanied us on our way to old, or biblical, Jericho. Here we bade him adieu, presenting him and his minister with two loaves and a few pieces of Arabic money. He smote his breast and shook hands ; we, therefore, considering it the proper thing to do, smote our breasts and shook hands.

'La Pluie de Perles,' a drawing-room pianoforte piece which had an extraordinary popularity, was Osborne's best known composition. In the course of a discussion following the late Charles Salaman's paper 'On music as a profession in England,' Osborne gave the following information concerning his chef d'œuvre for the drawing-room: (the quotation is from the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association'):

Many present might know the piece called 'La Pluie de Perles.' He wrote that piece in Paris, and sent it over to Cramer's. The manager wrote back to say that it would be better to send some pianoforte piece on an Italian opera; but he would enter this at Stationers' Hall as Mr. Osborne's property. He did not send a piece at that time, and took no more notice about it. A year afterwards he came to London, taught 'La Pluie de Perles' to several pupils, and, after about a year, when asking for his account at Cramer's, he found there was a charge for entering a piece at Stationers' Hall. He said that was not correct, as he had not the copyright of any of his pieces; however, they insisted that it was, and although the piece could have been had originally for £10, Mr. Beale then offered him £250 for it. He said he must first be certain that it was his property, and having sent to Stationers' Hall, and consulted Serjeant Byles, who was an authority on these questions, and found that it was so, he returned, but instead of selling it to Messrs. Cramer, he went round to all the publishers, and sold it to twelve out of fourteen, who had brought it out, for £10 each. By this means he sold it for £120, instead of £250, but he made every publisher his friend, and by that mere chance he eventually put between £5,000 and £6,000 into his pocket.

In the course of the same speech he humorously referred to cathedral organists thus:

It was a most honourable position to be organist of a cathedral. He heard the very best works there; his body was well cared for, having plenty of exercise, both on the pedals and in pulling out the stops; and not only so, but his spiritual wants were also ministered to; for, besides the great festivals, there were fifty-two weeks in each year, and consequently he had the advantage of hearing one hundred and four sermons.

To return to 'La Pluie de Perles.' This piece, Osborne's Op. 61, which doubtless first appeared in Paris, is dedicated in one of the English editions to 'Miss M. J. Wilson (Pianiste), Sunderland,' and has for its sub-title 'Valse Brillante,' but in another English edition the dedicatee is Miss Grace Chappell! The following is an amusing anecdote of the popular piece which Osborne was wont to tell against himself:

At a fashionable party, at which he arrived very late, he was invited to play, and he accordingly sat down at the pianoforte and began to play 'La Pluie de Perles.' To his great surprise and indignation the assembled guests burst out laughing; but he was easily appeased when he learned that no fewer than four other pianists had already performed the same composition!

That Osborne's memory should not be exclusively associated with a drawing-room pianoforte piece, it should be recalled that he composed two operas, three overtures, a sextet for wind instruments, a quintet for pianoforte, wind instruments, and double-bass, three trios, a clever violoncello sonata, an Andante and rondo for Joachim, and a number of duets with De Beriot for violin.

Warm-hearted, cultured, keen-witted, George Alexander Osborne died in London, November 16th (not 17th, as stated in the 'Dictionary of National Biography'), 1893, aged eighty-seven, and his remains were interred in Highgate Cemetery.

Hundreds of performances of Handel's 'Messiah' are given which are not recorded in London musical journals; but the interpretation of the work on August 14, in the Town Hall, Cambridge, was of exceptional interest. We give the title-page and historical note of the programme in full:

The present performance of 'The Sacred Oratorio' has been undertaken to enable the student to realize the conditions under which the work was performed, when conducted by the great master himself.

We are enabled to have a fairly accurate reproduction, as there are still in existence three lists of the Singers and Orchestral players, employed by Handel and his successor Smith, with even the fees each received, at three of the annual performances given in the Chapel of the Foundling Hospital on behalf of the Funds of that noble Institution, and it is from these lists that the numbers employed on the present occasion in Chorus and Orchestra have been arranged.

The first of the lists referred to above, was for the performance on April 27th, 1758, arranged and conducted by Handel.

The second was for May 3rd, 1759. This was probably drawn up by Handel with an idea that he would conduct the work, but he died before the day of performance.

The third list was arranged by Smith (Handel's successor and life-long friend) for Friday, May 2nd, 1760, exactly on the same lines as those previously drawn up, and the work was conducted by him.

There are one or two doubtful points in these lists, which renders it impossible to guarantee an exact reproduction, but everything has been done from the information obtainable, to make the performance as accurate and interesting as possible.

A. H. MANN.

At Cambridge, Dr. Mann, who attempted an exact reproduction of those 18th century performances, came very near to the mark, so far as the letter of the Foundling lists was concerned; the parts for organ and harpsichord—for the latter a pianoforte was substituted—were, according to the custom of the time, left unwritten. Dr. E. W. Naylor, organist of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of Ely Cathedral, officiated ably at the pianoforte and organ respectively. But of course it will be easily understood that they had to keep within modest limits; what Handel, with his genius and his conception of his own work made of those parts, it is scarcely possible to conceive. The soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Edith Nutter, and Messrs. J. Reed and J. E. Farrington. The main interest, however, centred in the small choir of twenty-four voices. Thanks to the goodwill of the singers and the Handelian enthusiasm of Dr. Mann the choruses were admirably sung, with point, freshness and intelligence. The orchestra consisted of twenty strings, four oboes, four bassoons, one trumpet, two horns and drums. Thus the instrumentalists outnumbered the chorus singers, whereas nowadays the reverse is the case. The effects of the orchestral parts were most interesting: Handel knew the value of contrasts and, after the manner of his time, obtained them. His colouring, too, showed the hand of a master. In conclusion, Dr. Mann may be warmly congratulated on the result of his experiment.

Sir Charles Brett has been presented with a congratulatory address by the Belfast Philharmonic Society on the occasion of the recent honour of Knighthood conferred upon him by the King. Since the formation of the Society in 1874 he has taken a leading part in its affairs, having been one of the honorary secretaries since 1883, and it is in no small measure due to his untiring energy and whole-hearted enthusiasm that this organization has taken the foremost place in the musical life of Ireland. In the course of his reply to the address, Sir Charles said:

I need not attempt to point out the advantages of music as a recreation. In a busy life I have found it productive of the very greatest rest and change for a tired brain. Music was a divine art, and had gone on with the growth of civilization from the earliest times to the present. He hoped and believed that it would continue to do so long after golf and bridge had gone out of fashion.

The Hovingham Musical Festival—the thirteenth of the series—is announced to be held on October 17 and 18. The outline programme forecasts performances of the following works:

Choral: The Black Knight (Elgar); Te Deum (Dvorák); Kubla Khan (Coleridge-Taylor); Spring (Haydn); and Sleepers, wake (Bach).

Instrumental: Concerto for violin and violoncello (Brahms); Jupiter Symphony (Mozart); Ballet Egyptian (Luigini); Irish Rhapsody, No. 1 (Stanford); Violin concerto (Beethoven); and Violoncello concerto (Saint-Saëns).

In addition to the above a chamber concert will be given by the Kruse Quartet. The honorary conductor of the Festival is Mr. T. T. Noble, organist of York Minster, but the Rev. Canon Pemberton, founder and former conductor of this interesting Yorkshire music-making, will take charge of the Jupiter symphony and Haydn's 'Spring.'

The preliminary prospectus of the Birmingham Musical Festival—October 2, 3, 4, 5—announces the following quartet of new works, all by native composers. The order of performance is as hereunder stated:

Oratorio—The Kingdom	-	-	Edward Elgar.
The Bells (for chorus and orchestra)	-	-	Joseph Holbrooke.
Sinfonietta in G minor	-	-	Percy Pitt.
Omar Khayyam	-	-	Granville Bantock.

Choral works, other than the above novelties, include the following:

Elijah; The Apostles; Sing ye to the Lord (Bach); Messiah; Mass in D (Beethoven); The Revenge; and Hymn of Praise.

Orchestral compositions are represented by—

Symphony in C minor (Brahms); Symphonic poems Don Juan and Tod und Verklärung; Overtures Le Carnaval Romain, Tannhäuser, and Flying Dutchman; and Violin concertos (soloist, Mischa Elman) by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

Dr. Hans Richter occupies his accustomed place as conductor, Mr. R. H. Wilson is the chorus-master, and Mr. C. W. Perkins is the organist, while the soloists are twelve in number.

High falutinism finds favour in the Antipodes. This is the strain in which a Sydney newspaper described an organ recital given by Mr. Edwin (not Edward) H. Lemare:

He sits down in front of the key-board, and at once there is a mighty rushing tidal wave of sound. Edward, with the curly moustache, stands beside it—turns it with one hand from one ocean into another; pats it smooth; puts a white, fat palm on it, and squashes it flat and still; lifts it up with two fingers, and wipes the spray off it with a third; gives it a little shove, till all the roaring, screaming, spouting, trumpeting, hooting monsters in creation are rolling along its crest; then suddenly he puts a thumb in front of it, and stops it dead, so that one foolish little bird in a rose garden may begin to twitter.

Then Edward, with the same plump, placid face, drops the tidal wave down into a gulf of silence, and you go away to consider what a fearsome monster the organ is, and how many things might happen if it broke loose and ran amok, with torn music hanging from its jaws and a froth of wild sound dripping from its mouth.

An addition to the vocabulary of musical terms comes to us from Barmouth in an assertive yellow poster which, in black letters four inches high, is headed:

HADELORIAN ORGAN
RECITALS.

But if Handel's star was in the ascendent at those performances, why not Handelorian?

PETER CORNELIUS.

A good, lovable man, a sterling, upright character was Peter Cornelius, whom, after perusing these two portly volumes,* we seem to know as intimately as if he were a dear, life-long friend. His is the usual story of a genius-gifted composer's struggle for recognition which refused to come, or at any rate to provide the wherewithal of an independent existence until Cornelius had reached the middle-age period of his life. He had to rely upon his brothers and friends to provide him with money whenever he was unable to obtain pupils, or when such work as translating essays, poems and operatic libretti for Liszt, Berlioz and Rubinstein was not forthcoming. Most of his compositions—chiefly collections of songs, now prized as little masterpieces—went the round of many publishers' offices only to be returned or forgotten; indeed, many were not published until after his death! Even his masterpiece, the delightful 'Barber of Bagdad,' which in his lifetime enjoyed one single performance only, brought him in a tantième of five double Louis d'or. Cornelius was one of those artists who, knowing in what direction their strength lies, spend the greater part of their lives waiting for something to turn up which shall enable them to exercise their particular gifts to their own fullest artistic satisfaction, and meanwhile refuse to turn their hand to some other work—uncongenial perhaps, but neither difficult nor degrading—which would secure for them something like independence. Thus we see poor Cornelius continually urged by relatives and friends to obtain some fixed appointment as conductor, organist, or teacher. Once or twice he tries, unsuccessfully; but generally he argues that he is unfit for the post, that he wants liberty, which of course means liberty to wait for something better, something more suited to his hyper-sensitive, independent nature. There is no doubt that he might have gained a better position for himself, both as man and as creative artist, if he had been more energetic, more a man of the world who knows how to embrace an opportunity when it presents itself. But even this weakness in his character fails to spoil the fascinating character-picture drawn by the man himself in these 700 letters, poems and extracts from diaries, totalling no less than 1,600 pages. The charm of his personality is of a rare and fragrant kind, and one never dips into these volumes without feeling refreshed and all the better for having had a chat with and grasped the hand, so to speak, of this good and true, noble-hearted and broad-minded man; for having listened to his deeply-felt and earnestly-expressed views on life, religion and his beloved art, or smiled at his jokes and jingling, humorous rhymes.

Peter Cornelius was the son of an actor, and the godson of a cousin of his father, Peter von Cornelius, the great German painter, in whose honour Mendelssohn composed his spirited 'Cornelius' march. Little Peter—'Pitterchen,' as he called himself, to rhyme with 'Mütterchen'—was destined for the stage, that is to say, his father, the actor, wished to play the part of Destiny for his son who, however, after a few unsuccessful appearances (e.g. as Raoul in Schiller's 'Maid of Orleans,' when Peter's legs and chest were 'splendidly stuffed, to give him a manly appearance') was early attracted by music. Thus we find him in 1841, at the age of seventeen, in London, staying at 17, Southampton Street, Covent Garden, as a second violinist in the orchestra of a German Opera Company, playing in Drury Lane Theatre. He cannot have been a very wonderful fiddler, for after the first performance (Weber's 'Freischütz') he writes to his father that he 'got on very well in the orchestra, and did not cause the least trouble.' He revels in the wonders of the London streets, the museums, churches, &c., and lives as cheaply as he can, so as to be able to buy some presents for his relatives. He only complains of the after effects of sea-sickness and of the London water, which is 'bad and dangerous to health.' He has 'coffee and bread for breakfast, costing me 2½d.; for dinner I have some delicious pea-soup, meat and pudding, costing me 8d. or 10d., or at the utmost 1 shilling. In the evening I drink a point (sic!) of half-and-half which costs 3d., and if I am hungry I eat a couple of boiled eggs or bread and cheese. I don't like the English beer, but when I do get thirsty I prefer half-and-half!' At Manchester the German opera company came to grief financially. Poor Peter did not like the place at all: 'It seemed too disgusting at first, after London, and even now I cannot work up any enthusiasm over it. It is a very large town, dissected by three filthy, muddy rivers and many canals; people say it rains here for nine months of the year, and snows during the remaining three months,' and so on.

Upon his return to Mayence we find him applying his eager mind to the study of Bach's '48,' Mozart's quartets, and Shakespeare, in English and German, for which purpose he rises regularly at six o'clock. He has lessons in composition from Heinrich Esser (afterwards conductor at the Vienna Court Opera), who 'is a Brummbar (grumbling bear), always wanting originality; but I fear this early striving after originality is not wise; it is the greatest fault of the modern composers.' And then the seventeen-year-old wiseacre adds the very sage and true remark: 'of course it is best if the compositions are spontaneously original.' True, O wise, young judge, for thus we get a Schubert, Berlioz, Dvorák, or Cornelius! In 1845 he is in Berlin, the guest of his 'swell' relative (always called uncle by him) 'Geheimrath' Peter von Cornelius, the painter, where he meets many distinguished men of the day.

The old gentleman seems to have been kind enough to his struggling young relative, but he was evidently a man to be esteemed rather than loved. 'He is surrounded,' writes Peter to his favourite sister, 'by a host of sycophants, admirers, and patronizing enthusiasts—but friends? He has no friend like his good cousin Carl (Peter's father). His name will ever shine in the history of Art—but in the hearts of loving men? Dear Susanna! If a good genius descended from heaven, and with one hand offered me my uncle's perfection of art, and with the other my father's perfection of love, Oh! I would sorrowfully shut my eyes to the one, and with both hands would grasp such love.'

At the Berlin opera Cornelius heard Jenny Lind, then at the beginning of her wonderful career, and introduced to Berlin by Meyerbeer, who had written his opera 'Ein Feldlager in Schlesien' (1840) specially for her. 'A foretaste of heavenly bliss,' raves Peter, 'worth more than seeing the other puppets dance, or hearing even the most voice-gifted of hens cackle a hundred times.' He makes good progress in his musical studies under S. W. Dehn, whom he likes all the better for displaying certain little human failings and weaknesses. He 'loves the dear old Adam' in him because, seeing the master thus humanly weak on occasions 'makes my affection for him possible.' Amongst attempts at composition some marches for infantry and cavalry bands, an overture for grand orchestra, and a 'Stabat mater' are mentioned, but none of these things have been preserved. He makes plans for going to Paris to study singing under Garcia, though this, like so many of Cornelius's châteaux d'Espagne, came to naught. He calls on Taubert, the conductor of the Berlin opera, and on Nicolai, the other court Kapellmeister (composer of 'The Merry Wives of Windsor') for an expression of opinion on his compositions. Their verdicts were depressing. The former recommends 'sticking to song-writing.' 'I had brought a Tragedy and he said "write songs"; I had come with plans for palaces and he said: "go and build pigsties."' Nicolai was even more cruel: 'He says I know nothing, can't write a note correctly, should have studied with Neithardt, Grell, or Taubert—with anybody rather than Dehn. In fact, he kicked me, the load, whereas the kicks were meant for the donkey, alias Dehn.' No wonder the verdict of these great men upset poor Peter, and made a longer stay in Berlin distasteful. He speaks of founding a School of singing in some town in America, England or Germany, 'to train talented young people for the operatic stage and revive the old Italian vocal art.' Eventually, he visits Dessau, where Friedrich Schneider lived, one of the greatest theorists of his day and styled the 'Handel of his age' because of his many successful oratorios. Cornelius 'found the old gentleman sitting at the window, reading, suffering from stomach cramp, and with the most extraordinary nose in the world.' Naturally poor dyspeptic Schneider was not in a mood for perusing a nobody's attempts at composition, and so this little excursion proved fruitless. Soon we hear of plans for a comic opera: 'One road still remains open to us composers; we have had our three great tragic writers in music, but there has not yet been an Aristophanes. I know no purely German comic opera amongst modern works; since Dittersdorf we have not had a real comic writer amongst our composers,' &c., &c. Then he mentions a one-act comic opera; the libretto he has finished, and the music he hopes to complete in the spring. This little work (can it have been a first draft of the famous 'Barber of Bagdad'?) like so many actually completed songs, duets, string quartets, masses, psalms, &c., has disappeared. Cornelius, who applied the severest self-criticism, no doubt himself arranged an occasional auto-da-fé at which the unworthy children of his Muse were handed over to the flames. In his last letter from Berlin, dated February 2, 1852, he announces his first appearance as a musical critic. His article, on a concert in the Singakademie, appeared in the Konstitutionelle Zeitung on February 1. Needless to say he received nothing for it! But seeing that he afterwards displayed considerable activity and exceptional gifts as a writer on musical subjects, the fact that he became a critic for the said paper, 'quite unexpectedly,' is of interest. He looked upon it as 'an event' in his career, and no doubt he built more castles in the air. However, once again nothing came of the matter. In March we find him in Weimar, knocking at the gate of the Altenburg, the residence of Franz Liszt. His career may be said to have really commenced with this important step.

MENDELSSOHN'S VIOLIN CONCERTO.

BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

This exquisite composition—Mendelssohn's only Concerto for the violin, as Beethoven's was—was finally completed in the year 1844, and first performed by Herr Ferdinand David at one of the concerts at the Gewandhaus at Leipzig, on March 13, 1845. We say 'finally completed,' because there is evidence to show that it occupied the author more or less constantly during more than five years. On July 30, 1838, he informs David that he 'would like to write a Violin concerto for him next winter'—'One in E minor runs in my head, the beginning of which gives me no peace.' And no wonder, if the beginning was the same as we now have it! Later still it is 'swimming about in his head in a shapeless condition,' though 'a genial day or two would bring it into shape.' Not so easy, however; for David has bespoken a 'brilliant' beginning, and how is that to be got? The whole first solo must be on the high E!

After this we hear little more of it till 1844. It had, however, been constantly in his thoughts, and the themes and passages are said to have been quoted continually in his (unpublished) letters to the friends whom he was accustomed to consult on such points. The first draft may possibly have been made at Soden, near Frankfort, in the delicious weeks of rest and enjoyment which followed his triumphant but exhausting visit to England; and it was there, says Lampadius his biographer, that he first played it on the pianoforte to Moscheles. The manuscript score is dated (without place) 'd. 16 September, 1844.' It was performed in London, by Signor Sivori, at the concert of the Philharmonic Society on June 29,* 1846.

That was not, however, the actual first performance of the work in this country. We are indebted to Mr. F. G. Edwards for the following information, which, like all details regarding these great works, is full of interest, and will be welcomed by our readers:

'The first performance of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto in England,' says Mr. Edwards (see THE MUSICAL TIMES for July 1, 1896), 'took place on December 23, 1845, at the Western Institution, 47, Leicester Square, in the room which is now the well-known sale-room of Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, and formerly the studio of Sir Joshua Reynolds. The performer was a Herr Kreutzer, "Director of Music to the Grand Duke of Baden," and the occasion was a musical lecture on "Mendelssohn"—one of a series called "Evenings with the great composers"—given by Mr. Henry J. Lincoln, formerly musical critic of the Daily News, who played the pianoforte accompaniment to the concerto. Mr. Lincoln remembers that an old gentleman, seated in the front row of the audience, persistently marked the rhythm of the last movement with his umbrella! The first performance of the Concerto in England with orchestra was at the Philharmonic concert, as stated above.

Allegro molto appassionato (E minor), ending Presto and leading into Andante (C major); that into a short Allegretto non troppo (E minor), and that into the Finale, Allegro molto vivace (E major).

I. The Concerto opens with the prelude of only a single bar, with a passionate subject in the principal violin, of which the following is the commencement:

No. 1. Solo violin.

given out by the flutes and clarinets alone, and accompanied by the solo violin on the low G. Such are the main materials out of which the movement is formed.

But like everything of Mendelssohn's, each movement throughout the entire composition is brought up to the highest perfection of finish, and abounds with beauties small and great, all demanding quotation, if space allowed it. We cannot, however, resist calling attention to the beginning of the second solo—answering to the working-out section in a symphony—where a fragment from the main subject (No. 1) is emitted by the wind instruments (flute and clarinet, flute and oboe, clarinet and bassoon) alternately; these successive pairs calling to one another, somewhat after the fashion of a beautiful passage in the 'Hebrides' overture, the solo violin meanwhile pursuing its way up and down the scale in intervals measured by the theme which forms our second quotation (No. 2):

No. 4.

Solo violin. Fl. Clar. Bva. Strings. V'cello.

col bassi. (6) (5)

The cadenza, Mendelssohn's own (or rather, as the autograph and correspondence show, his and David's)—for he would not leave anything to chance—comes in earlier than usual, at the end of the third quotation. It begins solo; but before its restless arpeggios cease, is joined by the orchestra.

II. The second portion of the Concerto—Andante, 6-8, in the key of C—is not divided from the preceding movement by more than a short pause. The following is the beautiful theme with which it commences, after eight bars of prelude:

No. 5.

Solo violin. Andante.

&c.

Another theme, of a more agitated character, of which much use is made, is as follows:

No. 6.

&c.

III. A short movement of fifteen bars, Allegretto non troppo, in the original key, serves as a bridge from the calm beauty of the Andante to the fiery impetuosity of the Finale—Allegro molto vivace—which, after a few coquetting bars, dashes into the following graceful and irresistible theme in the major:

No. 7.

Solo violin. Allegro molto vivace.

Another theme, worked with great pertinacity by the solo instrument and the entire orchestra, is as follows:

No. 8.

ff &c.

A third is given out by the solo violin in G major:

No. 9.

cres. &c.

and is then made to do duty, in a manner and with an effect which no one who hears it can ever forget, as accompaniment to the original theme (No. 7) in this fashion:

No. 10.

Solo violin. Viol. 1 & 2. Violas & 'cellos. Bassi pizz. &c.

Here the new theme is given to the whole of the strings (except the basses) in unisons and octaves with much expression, and the result is truly splendid. This is just before the reprise of the subject, where the same thing occurs in E major with even still finer effect.

The autograph of the Concerto belonged to the late Ferdinand David, and through his kindness we had the privilege of examining it. The manuscript is an oblong folio volume of sixty-six pages, with twelve staves to a page. At the top of the first page Mendelssohn has written 'Concerto.' . . . 'H. d. M.,*' and at the end he has dated it 'd. 16 September, 1844.' It is a beautiful specimen of Mendelssohn's neat, clear handwriting, with comparatively few alterations. Here and there a couple of bars are crossed out from top to bottom (evidently done while writing), and there are constant small corrections, but nothing important. But a comparison of it with the printed score reveals very many interesting changes, testifying to that never-ceasing desire to do his best, and give the thought that was in his mind its very finest and clearest form. In fact, when examined with the help of the letters which passed between Mendelssohn and David, it becomes evident that the time between September 16 and the 13th of the following March was occupied more or less constantly in canvassing various minute changes, all improvements, though not all of equal moment. Two specimens of these letters, given below, convey an idea of the general nature of these changes, and the ultimate result would be seen by a minute comparison of the manuscript with the printed score.

The first movement is marked Allegro con fuoco in the autograph; the other movements are as in the printed copy. Of the more important changes in the music the following may be noticed in the part of the solo violin:

Page 9 (of the printed full score*). The second subject was originally introduced an octave lower than it now stands, thus:

the gain in sonority and brilliancy in the change being obvious.

The well-known passage at p. 18 was originally quite different and far less effective (as will be evident from the quotation), besides missing the present references to the principal theme of the movement:

&c.

The same thing, mutatis mutandis, occurs in the recurrence of the passage at p. 33. A more complex alteration has been made at p. 21, involving the excision of two bars, and the sacrifice of an allusion to the rhythm of the original theme in the trumpets and drums—see (a a) below, compared with the three opening bars of the Allegro. But then the very remarkable modulation into C sharp, which follows the quotation, is anticipated by two bars:

The following are the letters from Mendelssohn to Ferdinand David above referred to :

Frankfurt, December 17, 1844.

Dear David,

I have now sent the score of the violin concerto to Breitkopf and Haertel and I have made a good many alterations in it : these must be altered in the band parts. There are also a good many alterations in the solo part. I hope they are improvements. Concerning all this I should so much like to have your opinion before giving the concerto to irrevocable publicity. If only I were near you, you would escape with a few afternoon calls, but as it is, I must beg you to write me as explicitly as you possibly can on the following points.

Firstly. Do you like the altered and extended cadenza? It pleases me much more than the original version : but is it playable and correctly noted? I want the arpeggios to begin at once in strict time and in four parts up to the tutti. I hope this will not be too exacting for the performer. I suppose also that the diminuendo into the pp can be easily managed. Is the alteration at the end of the first movement easy to play? I should think so.

One important point which is not clear to me—although I ought to be ashamed to confess it—is the pizzicato accompaniment to the subject of the Adagio [Andante]. I originally intended to write it in this way, but something or other—I really don't know what, prevented me. It is not the question what the effect of the pizzicato would be—I know that well enough—but what its effect will be in combination with the coll arco basses and solo violin. Will you be good enough to show the passage to Gade and let me know his opinion : and do not laugh at me too much! I am thoroughly ashamed of myself ; but I can't help it and shall never get free of my habit of groping about.

Is the return to C major, without the flute, quite easy to play now? Really quite easy, so that it could be executed with the greatest delicacy? You will not be displeased to find that in the last movement the solo part in less covered up.

'Thank heaven,' you will exclaim, 'that the concerto is finished.' Excuse my bothering you; but what am I to do?—Yours,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

Frankfurt a. M., February 19, 1845.

Dear David,

Very many thanks for all the trouble you are taking with my Violin concerto, and forgive me for all the time and patience it must have cost you.

The bar before the cadenza I wish not to be repeated; I put there 'Cadenza ad libitum,' by which I mean that the arpeggios can be made as long or as short as you like. If the ad libit. is not there, I will add it in correcting the proofs.

The four-part arpeggios are what I like best, with the same bowing from the beginning ff to the end pp. But if that is inconvenient, then alter them thus:

in that case, from the semiquavers onwards, by all means use a staccato bow.

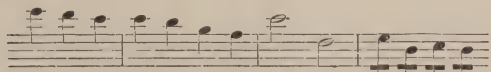

Please alter the end of the first movement entirely according to your wish:

only, if not more difficult, I should naturally like it thus:

At the end [of the last movement] I would much rather take the octaves quite away. Please correct it thus:

Once more excuse all this trouble with which I bother you so; also excuse these hurried lines written in the greatest haste. Love to your wife.

Always thine,

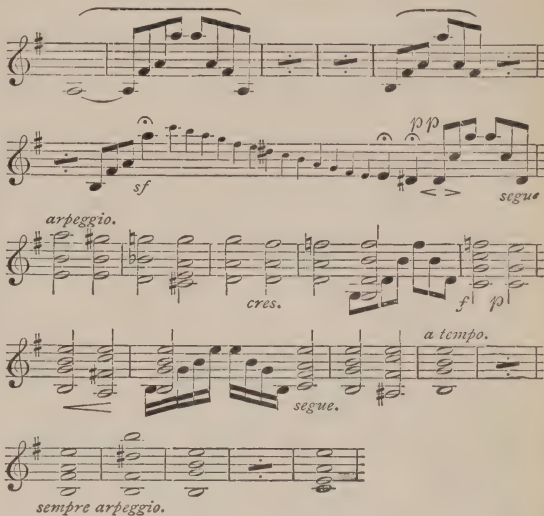

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

[The following additional changes have kindly been sent, specially for this reprint of Sir George Grove's analysis, by Mr. Paul David, of Uppingham, the former owner of the autograph.—ED. M.T.]

The passage 14 bars before the Più presto (1st movement) originally stood thus:

The Cadenza took this form; it is a mere sketch of what it afterwards became, and some of its best features are absent:

Church and Organ Music.

BEFORE AND AFTER THE GOSPEL.

The above ascriptions, so familiar in the Communion Service, have a little history of their own which is not without interest. One naturally, in the first place, turns to Jebb's 'The choral service of the united Church of England and Ireland' (1843) in order to see what the worthy Canon has to say on the subject. We quote from p. 481:

The Glory before the Gospel is a short Anthem, customarily kept up in all churches, and forming part of the choral system universally, though enjoined by no present Rubric. It is to be found, however, in all the editions of the Prayer Book before the last review, and is supposed to have been omitted through inadvertence. No direction exists for announcing the termination of the Gospel, which may be accounted for by the ancient custom, enjoined by the Scotch Prayer Book, and prevalent in many country churches in England, though sanctioned by no Rubric, of saying or singing 'Thanks be to thee, O Lord,' when the appointed portion has been read.

Jebb, however, is in error when he states that 'the Glory before the Gospel is to be found in all the editions of the Prayer Book before the last review' (1662). An examination, at the British Museum, of the original editions of the Prayer Book has resulted in the following information: 'The booke of common prayer and administracion of the Sacramentes, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church: after the use of the Church of England'—a black-letter tome published in 1549 and known as the Prayer Book of Edward VI.—contains the following direction in the Communion Service:

Immediately after the Epistle ended, the priest, or one appointed to reade the Gospel, shall saie. The holy Gospell written in the Chapter of

The Clarke and people shall aunswere

GLORY BE TO THEE, O LORDE.

No such direction appears in the Prayer Books of 1552, 1559, and 1662, therefore, whether it was omitted by inadvertence or purposely, the ascription is technically illegal, though, as the recent 'Report of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Discipline' states, it may 'be justified by long usage,' as, indeed, it is.

Let us now turn to a 17th century Liturgy bearing the following title :

THE BOOKE OF COMMON PRAYER and Administration of the Sacraments. And other parts of divine service for the use of the Church of Scotland.

The issue of this Prayer Book, in the year 1637, formed part of Archbishop Laud's abortive attempt to force Episcopacy upon the Scottish people. To quote from Professor Meiklejohn's 'A new History of England and Great Britain' :

In 1633, eight years after his accession, Charles I. went down to Edinburgh, and was crowned with great pomp in the Abbey Church at Holyrood. He was so heartily received by all classes, that nothing he could wish for seemed likely to be rejected. When he got back to London, Laud proposed that Episcopacy should be restored in Scotland, the Liturgy introduced, and Presbyterianism abolished. Charles, with his usual want of sense and tact, consented. But the opposition was both general and intense. The Dean of Edinburgh no sooner opened the new prayer-book in the Cathedral of St. Giles, than stools, books, and cushions were hurled at his head : and the bishop and he had to flee for their lives, and were with difficulty smuggled back to their own homes. In keeping with the clumsy and generally too late concessions of Charles, it was discovered that the law made it binding on all persons to buy the prayer-book, but not necessarily to use it.

The Communion Service of the Scottish Prayer Book of 1637 contains the following direction :

And the Epistle ended, the Gospel shall be read, the Presbyter saying: The holy Gospel is written in the Chapter of at the verse. And then the people all standing up shall say: Glory be to thee, O Lord.

At the end of the Gospel, the Presbyter shall say: So endeth the holy Gospel. And the people shall answer: Thanks be to thee, O Lord.

Through what instrumentality the doxology 'Thanks be to thee, O Lord' (or 'Thanks be to thee, O Christ'), in this Scottish Liturgy, came into use in the Church of England appears to be unknown.

Turning to the consideration of the music—called by Jebb 'a short anthem'—of these twin sentences, we may quote Mr. John S. Bumpus, who tell us, in his biography of 'Sir John Stevenson' (1893), p. 61, that several old-time composers set them, such as Richard Portman, who was organist of Westminster Abbey in the reign of Charles I., and they occur in an ancient manuscript copy of his Service in F, in the possession of the writer. The doxology after the Gospel was most probably set for the first time by Tallis in his celebrated Service in the Dorian mode, composed soon after the Reformation ; and this is the one in ordinary use.

The present writer has searched through many of the Services by composers of the latter part of the 17th century, i.e., after the Restoration, for settings of these words, and has met with the following examples, some of which have not been printed:—Rogers in D, E minor and F; Bryan (of S. Paul's) in G; Ferabosco (of Ely) in A minor, D and E minor; Hawkins (of Ely) in A and G; Wise in E flat; and Loosemore in D minor. In the Services by the Georgian and early Victorian composers these settings seem to be of rare occurrence; we find them, however, in the Services of Hayes in E flat; Skeats (of Canterbury) in C; Jackson (of Exeter) in C, E, F and E flat; Clarke-Whitfield in E; and Sir J. L. Rogers in F. Attwood wrote an elaborate setting in the key of A, for use in S. Paul's Cathedral, to the words 'Thanks be unto Thee, O Lord, for this, Thy Holy Gospel.' In a volume of Anthems and Chants by James Radcliffe, lay clerk of Durham, published in October, 1801, the Thanksgiving after the Gospel is absurdly headed Gloria in Excelsis. At the present day, composers of full Communion Services invariably furnish original music for these sentences.

Mr. Bumpus has kindly supplied us with a copy of the Attwood setting to which he refers. Transcribed from a manuscript dated 1825, in his possession, it bears the statement that it was 'expressly composed for and is constantly used in St. Paul's Cathedral.' In sending the transcript Mr. Bumpus writes :

Taking the date into consideration, I should say that the little piece was intended as a part of the Service in A, composed by Attwood in 1825. It was in use at S. Paul's for a good many years, but I cannot exactly say when it was discontinued. The only portions of the Communion Service sung there in his time were the Sanctus, as an Introit, and the Kyrie: no Creed until 1842. It is curious how this little piece of music was retained in our churches at a time when everything except the Kyrie was unsung in the Communion Service. Here is the Attwood composition above referred to :

THANKSGIVING AFTER THE GOSPEL.

THOMAS ATTWOOD.

Thanks be to Thee, O Lord, . . . for Thy Ho - ly, Ho - ly Gos - pel. Thanks be to Thee, O

Lord, . . . for Thy Ho - ly, Ho - ly Gos - pel, Thy Ho - ly, Ho - ly Gos - pel.

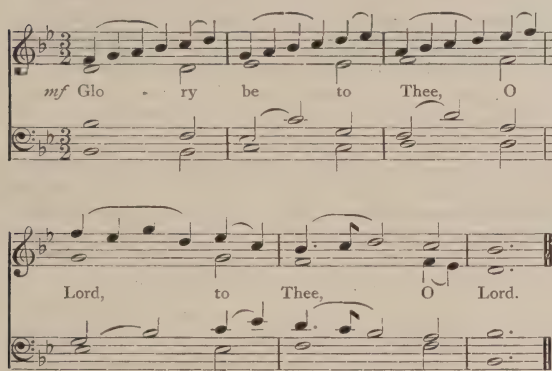

Mr. Bumpus adds :

I send you, with the Attwood Thanksgiving, one by Dr. Benjamin Rogers. He set this in all his Services, including the well-known one in D, though Boyce did not print it.

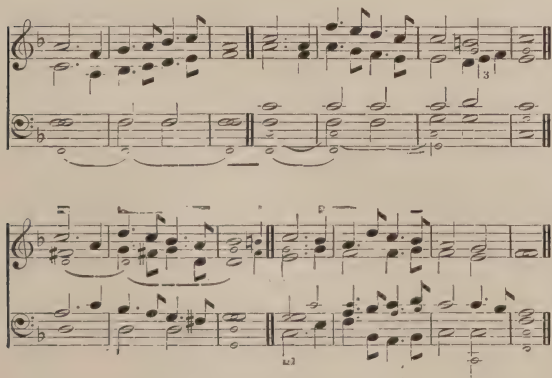

From Dr. Benjamin Rogers's Communion Service in G, in the autograph of Dr. Philip Hayes, in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus. See THE MUSICAL TIMES, December, 1905, p. 784.

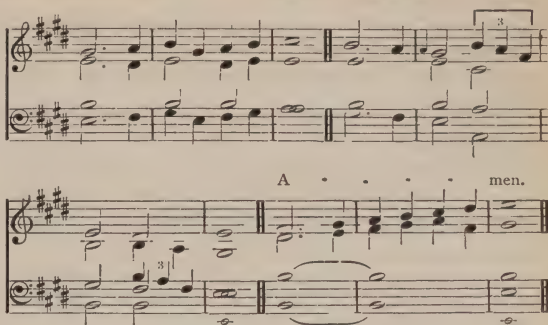

Some of the settings of 'Before and after the Gospel' are very wonderful inspirations, especially those of the dark period of English Church music, the late Georgian and early Victorian era. Michael Maybrick's 'Collection of Chants' (? 1825)—to which we referred in our July issue, p. 469—will furnish us with a typical example :

From the same book we cull one of Maybrick's chants, as showing the kind of strain beloved by singers in the early part of the 19th century :

As a matter of curious interest, it should be added that all the single and double chants in Maybrick's collection are furnished with Amens—sometimes the plagal, and at others the perfect cadence, and the last in the book, a single chant, is enriched with an extended Amen as follows :

REINAGLE'S 'ST. PETER' AND THOMAS BRITTON.

Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, writes :

I have been much interested in your article on Alexander Robert Reinagle—the friend of my friend, the late Mr. T. W. Taphouse, of Oxford—and think I can solve the little difficulty as to the date of the collection of Psalm tunes in which 'St. Peter' first made its appearance; that is the one published by T. Holloway, of Hanway Street. I fix the date as 1836, for in the Musical World of April 29, 1836, p. 116, occurs this advertisement :

ORIGINAL PSALM TUNES, for Voice and Piano,
Composed by A. R. REINAGLE of Oxford.
Published by Holloway, 5, Hanway Street, Oxford Street. Price 4s.

As this advertisement is not repeated—so far as I have seen—I take it that it is one of a new publication, and that the date, '1826,' given in 'Scottish Psalmody,' may very easily be a printer's error, or a slip of the pen, for 1836.

I am fairly familiar with the biography of the Reinagle family—the two Josephs, father and grandfather of the A. R. Reinagle we are dealing with; but I have an 18th century publication by one of the family which somewhat puzzles me. I assume it to be by a brother of the first Joseph and great uncle of the composer of 'St. Peter.' It is entitled :

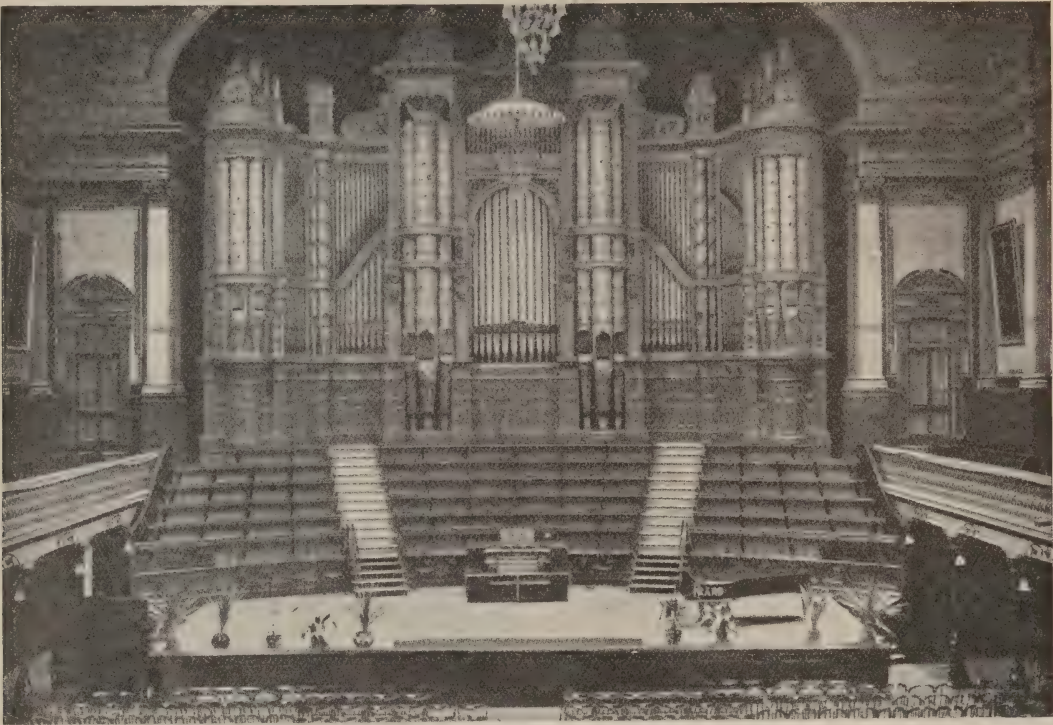

A | COLLECTION | of | The most favourite | SCOTS
TUNES | with Variations | for the | Harpsichord | by
A. REINAGLE | London. Printed for and sold by the Author. | Folio; engraved; pp. 26.

The imprint 'London' is, I fancy, a polite fiction, for the book is rudely engraved and I should say is either from an Irish or a Glasgow source. The Reinagle family settled in Edinburgh shortly after the middle of the 18th century, and I think that while the elder Joseph resided in Edinburgh, this A. Reinagle (his brother Alexander?) went to Glasgow. On the title-page of an interesting Glasgow publication of airs for the flute and violin—Aird's 'Selection of Scotch, English, Irish, and Foreign airs,' oblong 16mo [1782], vol. 2—is advertised 'Reinagle's Scotch airs for the Harpsichord, 4s.,' evidently the publication of which I have quoted the title.

I am sure all musical bibliographers will be grateful to you for reprinting in readable style the list of books which formed the musical library of Thomas Britton. How it makes one's mouth water! Apropos of Britton's library, there is a MS. entry in a book in the Bodleian Library which must formerly have belonged to the Musical small-coal man—viz., 'Mercurius Musicus,' 1699, oblong 4to. The note reads :

July 23, 1706. Borrowed of Mr. Britain 22 Old
Song Books, which I promise to return upon demand.
Witness my hand, William Pearson.

This William Pearson was the music-printer of Aldersgate. Was he faithful to his promise so solemnly entered into? What were those lightly-named 'Old Song Books' which would now be so precious?

THE ORGAN IN THE TOWN HALL, MELBOURNE.

This organ built by Messrs. William Hill & Son, at a total cost, including freight, duty, &c., of £7,000, was opened on August 10, 1872. Two or three years ago the Council took into consideration the necessity of bringing the instrument up to date in regard to action and tonal improvements, with the result that the work of reconstruction was placed in the hands of Messrs. Ingram, Hope, Jones & Co., of Hereford, at a cost of £4,500, and Mr. T. H. Collinson, of Edinburgh, supervised on behalf of the Melbourne Council the work executed in England. The organ, reconstructed on the electro-pneumatic system of action, was re-opened on July 4 by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, who gave an interesting recital. The following is the specification of the instrument as it now stands :

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC—(continued from page 618).

Dr. William George Price, organist to the Corporation of Belfast and of St. George's Episcopal Church in that city, has been appointed organist to the City Council of Melbourne for one year, during which time the permanent appointment is to be considered. The assessors appointed by the Melbourne authorities in the selection of a suitable candidate were Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. T. H. Collinson, organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh.

Mr. James J. Wedgwood delivered an interesting lecture on 'Modern organ tone' before the members of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association on July 21. This Association, which seems to be doing good work, now numbers 106 members. The honorary secretary is Mr. George F. Garner, Lion Arcade, Huddersfield.

At the recent Convocation held at the University of Toronto the degree of Doctor of Music was conferred, honoris causa, on Dr. Albert Ham, organist and choirmaster of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, and on Mr. A. S. Vogt, organist of Jarvis Street Baptist Church.

Messrs. William Hill & Son have issued a pamphlet entitled 'The art of organ building.' This attractive and fully illustrated publication contains an account of organs built by this old-established firm (founded 1755) in various cathedrals, town halls, and churches.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare has been giving organ recitals with much acceptance at Christchurch, New Zealand.

Reviews.

Unaccompanied part-songs for mixed voices and for male voices, composed by Peter Cornelius. With English words.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The recent publication of several part-songs by Peter Cornelius (1824-1874) provides a favourable opportunity for comment on an interesting section of the works of a remarkable and unduly neglected composer. In this country, at least, it is only within the last year or two that choral societies have realised that Cornelius's part-songs provide them with new and beautiful worlds to conquer. The discovery has been mainly due to the insight and courage of two of the northern competition festival managers, those at Morecambe and Blackpool, in offering as test-pieces some of the most formidable of the whole series; for it must be admitted that the finest of these part-songs present extraordinary difficulties to choralists and demand unusual interpretative perception on the part of conductors. These difficulties have severely tried the mettle of some of the best constituted choirs, and maybe they have led many other choirs to denounce the vaunted grapes as sour. But when the part-songs are perfectly performed—as, to the great credit of some choirs, they have been on several notable occasions—their effect has silenced all cavillers, and has revealed the fact that however forced and crabbed the music may appear to the eye, the idiom in which it is cast is a perfectly natural one to the composer, and is often a powerful means of expression. To hear 'O Death, thou art the tranquil night' sung perfectly, is to experience a never-to-be-forgotten thrill. Such a performance has been given by the Hanley Cauldon Choir, under Mr. James. On this occasion one of the foremost living composers said, with emotion, 'It is the finest thing I have ever heard in my life,' and the tears stood gently in the eyes of another well-known musician. Then who could fail to be moved by the brooding melancholy and gusts of passion in 'The old soldier's dream' (men's voices), after hearing it sung by the Manchester Orpheus Society under Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, the Southport Society under Mr. Clarke, and by other northern choirs that have made a special study of the piece?

Not all the part-songs of Cornelius are of the importance of those so far named, but there are others of great and striking merit. 'I can but love thee' (mixed voices, six parts) and 'Throne of mercy' (mixed voices, eight parts) are two that stand out, if only because they exhibit the composer in a more optimistic mood than do most of his choral works. 'Throne of mercy' has some powerful and gorgeous harmonic effects and climaxes. 'Die Vätergruft' (The hero's rest), in Canon Gorton's English version, was one of the first of Cornelius's short pieces to be performed in this country. It is peculiarly scored for bass (or baritone) solo and chorus (soprano, tenor and two bass parts), and is a characteristic example of the composer's power to express uncanny feelings. 'The tempest' (mixed voice, eight parts, double chorus) is a big, broad, highly dramatic chorus, with swelling climaxes in large curves. It is a piece that would create a sublime effect if adequately performed by large choirs. We do not know whether it has yet been performed in this country, but it ought not to have long to wait for a hearing. 'Comfort in tears' is another piece written for an unusual combination—baritone solo and chorus of mezzo-soprano, tenor and two bass parts. The soloist sings inconsolably of his loss, and his comrades in lively strains call upon him to forget his sorrows. 'The patriot's vow' (four parts, T.T.B.B.) is another fine piece with highly effective and broad climaxes. Several of the smaller compositions for mixed voices are arrangements of slow dances from instrumental pieces by Bach, and these are all allied to sacred words. 'By the waters of Babylon' is an adaptation of the Sarabande in Bach's third English Suite; 'Thy face is hidden' is the Sarabande from the first French Suite; and 'Jerusalem' is the second Minuet from the first Partita.

The remaining pieces to be noticed are all for men's voices. 'The trooper's song' (eight parts, double choir) is a dramatic chorus sung by soldiers fleeing from pursuit and in fear of King Death. Three smaller pieces are of a solemn character, and intended to be sung by mourners for the dead at a graveside or elsewhere. 'Pilgrims' song' is an adaptation of the well-known theme in Schubert's D minor string quartet. 'Sorrow's tears' is an original composition with some deeply expressive effects. 'In the midst of life' is more developed, rising to moving passion and introducing a Kyrie eleison very impressively.

The English words in nearly all the pieces named are by Mr. W. G. Rothery, who has admirably fulfilled a difficult task. It is not merely that the original German words have been translated, but Mr. Rothery has contrived to fit the accents and not to distort the musical phrasing, and moreover the vowels are often well placed to allow of a maximum resonance. It may be hoped that the provision of an English edition of this beautiful and, to most choirs, new music, will attract the attention of conductors and chorists. The Welsh Eisteddfodau would do well to include some of it as tests; the more dramatic and emotional pieces should appeal to the best Welsh choirs.

Music and Musicians. By Edward Algernon Baughan.
[John Lane.]

The contents of this book comprise twenty-nine critical essays set forth under five sectional headings: Random reflections—Edward Elgar and 'The Apostles'—Some notes on Wagner's 'Ring'—Richard Strauss and his symphonic poems—Richard Strauss and programme music. The author, in his preface, says: 'As they [the essays] extend for a period of over twelve years, I have been brought face to face with some revelations of mental development which I had not expected.'

In perusing this volume one has just the feeling that Mr. Baughan is inclined to attach too much importance to the office of the musical critic, or, to be more exact, the critic of music; but no one will question his literary fluency, even if his opinions are not always respected. Much of the clever writing contained in this book is of an impressionist and personal pronoun kind, and regarded from that point of view the essays furnish matter that is quite readable. One of the most sapient sentences in the whole of the 325 pages is this: 'If I were a composer I would rather write a single song which said something, and said it beautifully, than half the symphonic poems of to-day.' In the thoughtful and interesting paper on 'The Apostles and Elgar's future,' the oratorio 'The Light of Life' is twice referred to (p. 203) as 'The Light of the World,' the title of an oratorio by Sir Arthur Sullivan; and on p. 206, line 7, should not the word 'can' be 'cannot?'

Harvest Festival Music. Book 43 of the Village Organist.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

It is a happy thought to provide books of organ voluntaries suitable for the various festivals and seasons of the Church, of which the first of the series, Harvest Festival Music, has just been issued. Here we find six pieces of various lengths and degrees of difficulty, though none of them are beyond the capacities of competent village organists. The selection opens with a Pastorale movement in the key of F, by Mr. Alfred Hollins, which in its 12-8 melodic flow is sure to prove attractive. Quite characteristic of the composer is the touch of extraneous modulation on page 2—not difficult, however, despite the accidentals, if the key tonalities are grasped as they should be. Pleasant contrast is furnished by the second subject (key B flat), and the pedal part is perfectly easy.

It may not be generally known that Handel originally wrote the duet in 'Judas Maccabæus' as a solo, therefore additional interest is attached to the arrangement, by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, of the said solo version, which makes a true Harvest voluntary ('O lovely peace, with plenty crowned') and forms No. 2 of the book under notice. Mr. Woods has also furnished some Variations on Elvey's well-known tune 'St. George,' so closely associated with Dean Alford's harvest hymn 'Come, ye thankful people, come.' After the theme has undergone variational treatment, the tune is given out on the full-organ, plus an effective pedal part in contrapuntal crotchets, which may be accepted as evidence of the high standard of technique with which Mr. Woods credits the village organist. In one single page Mr. John E. West shows what can be done in a 'short improvisation,' the said improvisation being on Schulz's tune 'Wir pflügen,' which is intended to be played either before or after the singing of the hymn 'We plough the fields and scatter.'

An arrangement of 'Thanksgiving at Harvest Time' from Dr. Cowen's oratorio 'Ruth,' provides an introductory voluntary, and a Fantasia on Barnby's anthem 'O Lord, how manifold,' by Mr. John E. West, will admirably serve its purpose as an effective postlude. In addition to those whose spheres of work lie in villages, there are doubtless many other organists who will welcome this garner of harvest music, published at the moderate price of One Shilling.

NEW EDITIONS OF STANDARD ANTHEMS.

This is the record of John. Deliver us, O Lord. Composed by Orlando Gibbons.

Great and marvellous. Composed by Thomas Tomkins.

Put me not to rebuke, O Lord. Composed by William Croft.

Lift up your heads. Composed by William Turner.

Teach me Thy way. Composed by William Fox.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Fresh issues of the anthems of Orlando Gibbons and his distinguished contemporaries are to be warmly encouraged, for these men laid the foundations and built up to a considerable extent the splendid fabric of English church music. All the above anthems have been edited by Mr. John E. West, who has acquitted himself of his delicate work with conspicuous skill and artistic judgment. In some cases the editor has made considerable alterations in the disposal of the parts, but this has been accomplished without interfering with the original harmonic scheme. The autograph of 'This is the record of John,' in the library of Christ Church, Oxford, has an accompaniment for viols, and a note states that it 'was made for Dr. Laud, President of St. John's (College), Oxford.' The chorus parts are for S.A.A.T.B., but Mr. West has wisely adapted them for S.A.T.T.B. as being more likely to meet present tastes and requirements. The anthem therefore opens with a tenor instead of an alto solo, and this interchanging is maintained in two other solo passages. These portions provide effective contrast to the choruses, which, it need scarcely be said, are contrapuntal, as also is the accompaniment to the solos. The music, however, if somewhat severe in character, is dignified and interesting. The other anthem by Gibbons is shorter, and in four parts throughout. In common with its companion the choral-writing is independent, but it flows easily and will not be found difficult to read.

Thomas Tomkins—born in Pembrokeshire in 1586 and died in 1656—was a pupil of William Byrd and had a distinguished career. From being successively chorister and usher of Magdalen College, Oxford, he rose to the position of gentleman and organist of the Chapel Royal (1621) and subsequently became organist of Worcester Cathedral. The anthem 'Great and marvellous are Thy works' is from a published collection of his church music entitled 'Musica Deo sacra et Ecclesiae Anglicanae.' The work was originally laid out for S.A.A.T.B., but Mr. West has judiciously interchanged the parts to S.A.T.T.B.

'Put me not to rebuke,' by Dr. Croft, is as may be surmised more modern in character. The expression is more distinct, the variety of effects greater, and the Finale, a neatly developed fugue, provides an impressive conclusion. 'Lift up your heads,' by Dr. William Turner, was first published in Playford's 'Divine Companion' (1701). It is a short, spirited setting of verses seven and eight from Psalm xxiv., and is specially suitable for Ascensiontide. 'Teach me Thy way,' by William Fox—organist of Ely Cathedral from 1572 to 1579—written for four voices, is a beautiful example of early expression of devotional feeling. Simple and unaffected in design and character, the music seems to be the unpremeditated outpouring of an earnest spirit.

English Music [1604 to 1904]. Being the Lectures given at the Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, held at Fishmongers' Hall, London Bridge, June-July, 1904.

[The Walter Scott Publishing Company, Limited.]

It was a happy inspiration on the part of the Worshipful Company of Musicians to combine a series of lectures with the interesting exhibition which they formed at Fishmongers' Hall in 1904, in commemoration of the Tercentenary of the grant of their charter, and it is most fitting that these lectures should be brought together and published in permanent form; but we confess that we should have preferred to receive them in more serious garb than that of the 'Music Story Series,' and under a less misleading title than that of 'English Music.'

The course of lectures was much appreciated by an audience which filled the limited space available on each of the afternoons of the three short weeks during which the exhibition remained open—indeed, at Sir J. F. Bridge's lecture so many were turned away disappointed that he was persuaded to give it a second time, a fact which we do not find recorded in this volume. They were, of course, addressed to a popular audience, but the temptation to run into the 'Lecture with Musical Illustrations' of the Literary Institution was fairly resisted, so that none was without an educational value.

From a short preface in explanation of the scheme of the Exhibition we gather that Mr. T. L. Southgate has acted as general editor of the series, although he is apparently too modest to claim the position. We congratulate him on the care with which he has carried out his duties. To his untiring labours the Exhibition was greatly indebted for its success, while to him we owe two of the most interesting lectures of the series, the first on the Evolution of the Pianoforte, the second, of greater importance, on the Regal and its successors, which is of real value as tracing the development of instruments of the free reed class, although we notice that he fails to mention the Seraphine, the earliest attempt in that direction; the result was far from satisfactory, but it paved the way for the harmonium, and was mainly of English origin. The much-debated question, the construction of the hydraulic organ, was treated by the well-known enthusiast in early instruments, the Rev. F. W. Galpin, whose collection added so greatly to the interest of the Exhibition. Basing his design on that of a small model of baked clay discovered on the site of Carthage, Mr. Galpin has actually constructed a workable instrument which he claims to conform in every particular to the description as given by Hero and Vitruvius.

Of the scientific papers, that on single and double reed instruments was treated by Mr. D. J. Blaikley, whose authority on the subject none will gainsay, while an admirable lecture was given by Mr. J. E. Borland on brass instruments, the principles involved in the construction of which are so imperfectly understood even by many educated musicians. A lecture by Mr. J. Finn on 'The recorder, flute and its allies,' completed the circle of wind instruments, while Mr. W. W. Cobbett treated of the violin family; thus none of the departments of the orchestra, except the instruments of percussion, were neglected, nor was the disestablished family of viols overlooked, as it formed the subject of a most interesting lecture by Dr. Henry Watson, of Manchester.

The subject of early music printing fell of right to Mr. Alfred Littleton, who traced the art from its infancy, and was able to illustrate it by actual examples from his own valuable collection. It must suffice to record that the remaining lectures were—'English Songs' (Dr. W. H. Cummings); 'Madrigals, &c.' (Dr. Markham Lee); 'Music in England in the year 1604' (Sir J. F. Bridge); 'Dances of bygone days' (Mr. Algernon Rose); 'Masques and early operas' (Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast); 'English opera after Purcell' (Dr. F. J. Sawyer); and 'Cathedral music composers' (Dr. Huntley), so that it will be seen the whole course was laid out on a scheme which fairly covered the subject. To these must be added Sir Ernest Clarke's breezy lecture on 'Music of the country-side.' It remains to add that all these lectures were worthy of the occasion, and the musical illustrations well selected and well rendered, while Mr. Prendergast and Sir E. Clarke varied the proceedings so far as to introduce dancing. It should be mentioned that of the seventeen lectures twelve were delivered by members of the Musicians' Company.

The book is well printed and profusely illustrated with musical examples, figures of instruments and reproductions of titles of ancient musical works. The frontispiece, however excellent as a work of art, is wholly out of place, and we fancy that some of the facsimiles are not reproduced from their originals.

The Sands of Dee. Ballad for chorus and orchestra. Words by Charles Kingsley. Music by Charles A. E. Harriss. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Not a few composers have been inspired by the tragic fate of the hapless maid who went 'all alone' to call the cattle home on the sands of Dee; but Dr. Harriss's setting possesses a freshness that certainly justifies his taking as his text Charles Kingsley's pathetic lines. The composer makes it manifest that the poem lends itself to the choral ballad form, and this in itself is no small testimony to his success. The music contains several points of interest. At the opening the figure in the accompaniment, alternating in each bar between E minor and G major, ingeniously suggests 'the cruel crawling foam,' and use of this figure at the close of the work gives an artistic sense of completeness. The creeping up of the fatal 'Western tide' is also cleverly illustrated, and impressive use is made of a ground bass at the words 'They rowed her in across the rolling foam.' The vocal parts are equally well designed to intensify the mental picture conjured up by the poem, and the little work may be warmly recommended to conductors of choral societies as likely to interest both singers and listeners.

The Independent Methodist Tune Book. Edited by Richard Brimelow and Thomas Robinson.

[Wigan: The Independent Methodist Book Room.]

The output of new collections of hymn tunes shows no signs of abatement. For the most part they are now issued with the words of the hymns with which they are allied, but the first of the books under review consists of tunes only. In discharging their duties the editors of the Independent Methodist Tune Book had a three-fold object in view—we quote from the Preface—(i.) 'to enrich the Service of Praise by providing a book which would contain a large selection of the best tunes published during the last four centuries'; (ii.) 'to supply new tunes to many hymns the metres of which are universally acknowledged to be inadequately provided for,' and (iii.) 'to present in one book a collection of tunes so comprehensive as to satisfactorily meet the varied requirements of Churches, Sunday Schools, and Missions.' These objects appear to have been attained in the 779 tunes which form the collection, to which Mr. Brimelow, one of the editors, has contributed no fewer than forty-two compositions. It is interesting to learn that a prize competition in connection with this book resulted in the enormous number of 3,500 tunes being sent in. The collection appears to have been well edited and will doubtless meet the requirements of those for whom it has been prepared. An edition of the book is issued under the title of 'The Manchester Tune Book,' whereby it is made available for undenominational use.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C. By Geoffrey C. E. Ryley.

Te Deum, Jubilate, Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis in G. By Herbert W. Wareing.

A Service for the Holy Communion in E minor. By B. Agutter.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The setting of the evening canticles by the Rev. Geoffrey C. E. Ryley has been composed for this year's annual festival of the Gloucester Diocesan Choral Union, and consequently it is interesting as indicative of the average abilities of choirs taking part in the celebration. From this point of view the work is most satisfactory, for the composer has not hesitated to write freely, and to make demands on the choristers calling for musical intelligence and good training. At the same time ineffective difficulties have been studiously avoided, much cleverness being shown in obtaining impressive harmonic effects by simple means. One specially notable transition occurs at the words 'For He that is mighty,' and the subsequent lines are also allied to music thoroughly modern in character. The accompaniment is admirably designed to impart solidity to the vocal part and also possesses some independence, a particularly effective passage being the setting of the verse commencing 'He hath put down the mighty from their seat.' The Gloria, diatonic and vigorous, contains well-designed passages in contrary motion. The music for the Nunc dimittis begins impressively pianissimo, and the subsequent phrases are tender and sympathetic, a gradual crescendo being worked to an imposing climax at the words 'The glory of Thy people Israel.' The Gloria is the same as that to the Magnificat.

Dr. Wareing's setting of the Morning and Evening Service (in G) is well designed to meet the requirements and abilities of average church choirs. The music is distinguished by the firm touch of the hand that knows and is experienced, while contrast and variety are obtained by simple but effective means. In the Te Deum certain passages might be sung as solos and others as quartets, but this is quite optional, as these portions can be rendered by the choir. The composer is to be commended for including the Jubilate, a canticle too much neglected, and his music reflects its bright spirit. The setting of the Magnificat is in triple rhythm, which helps to accentuate its jubilant character. The Nunc dimittis is allied to gracious music, and contains an effective passage in imitation at the words 'For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation.'

The setting of the Holy Communion Service by Dr. Agutter may be warmly recommended, being excellent music imbued with a true devotional spirit. The Credo in particular is happily treated, a special point being the organ accompaniment to the words 'God of God,' &c. The vocal parts include brief passages for soprano and bass solo, and a quartet, but the music is quite easy throughout. In the Sanctus an excellent use of imitation occurs at the words 'Heaven and earth,' and the subsequent bars contain a fine climax. The Benedictus includes two short solos for tenor, and solos for bass and tenor (or baritone), and a quartet are written in the Agnus Dei. The music to the Gloria in Excelsis is equally well varied, and the ending is appropriately brilliant and imposing.

Correspondence.

PRAEGERIANA.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I am grateful for the two corrigenda supplied me on pages 540 and 551 of your August issue, and shall avail myself of them not only in any future edition of my vol. v., where they will occasion amendment of barely a dozen lines in all—not the re-writing of a couple of pages, as your reviewer fears—but also, and perhaps at greater length, in a note to my incipient vol. vi., 'Life of Wagner.'

The re-numbering of Milton Street I now have proved for myself to have taken place in 1865 (just nine years after Praeger's tenancy), its change of name to Balcombe Street in 1886, and therefore can endorse the 'No. 65' of your contributor—who unfortunately had given me at first a twinge of doubt through specifying '1838,' in lieu of the notorious 1839, as the date of Wagner's earlier glimpse of London. The late F. Praeger (whose 'Wagner as I knew him' demonstrably was incomplete in the spring of 1887) never troubled to furnish us with either clue to the identity of the home in which he received Wagner on 'the first night of his eventful visit to London' of 1855; he mentions Milton Street but once, and then without the faintest number. But intending pilgrims will now be able to gaze upon 65, Balcombe Street, a broader-fronted house than 31, in confident assurance—till some further transformation overtakes it—that Wagner really slept a night, and spent an incomputable amount of social hours there.

As for the English Gentleman, it is satisfactory to learn that Praeger did administer to its columns of November, 1845, a sort of article on 'Tannhäuser,' though he had left us in worse than doubt by describing it on one occasion as a review of the performance of 'Rienzi,' and on another by making Wagner praise it in a proved interpolation of Praeger's own—a playful little way Praeger had. I have now called the officials of the British Museum over the coals for assuring me twelve years ago that the only English Gentleman they knew of was born and buried in 1835, and they have explained their old error by the fact that the English Gentleman of 1845-46 was simply a re-named continuation of the Age and Argus, a weekly which 'Mitchell'—itself first published in 1846—retrospectively accuses of 'scurillity.' Such a miss-fire, be it said in justice to them, is most unlikely to occur again, for the recent general overhauling of the overburdened Newspaper department has resulted in the placing of a full and careful catalogue of its possessions at the handy disposal of 'readers'—a boon denied to these in former days.

Your reviewer's enviable discovery of the said article or letter signed 'F. P.' though, will not appreciably help poor Praeger's cause. The harmless misprint 'Tannhäuser' is by no means the only oddity therein, and if this 'F. P.' is really our old friend—which I see no reason to dispute—here again he has written the thing that was not. He told the Neue Zeitschrift of January, 1856, 'I myself had never seen Wagner conduct' (Obschon ich selbst Wagner nie dirigiren gesehen), yet in this so-called 'letter from Dresden' he goes to the extremity of 'describing' the 'Tannhäuser' premiere from the standpoint of personal presence. Perhaps we must dub it his playfulness again, but it is rather a strong joke for a man who prior to 1855 'had never seen Wagner conduct,' to inform the British public in 1845: 'his "Tannhäuser" is his chef-d'œuvre [sic], and forms an era in music, both as to invention and scoring. The performance was perfection itself; to give you an idea of the strength of the personale, I need only name Madame Schroeder Devrient, the celebrated tenor, Mitterwurzer Tichatscheck, &c. [Mitterwurzer played Wolfram, remember]—they sang with inspiration. The orchestra, conducted by the composer . . . everything was as perfect in its way as it is possible to conceive, and the treat of witnessing a performance in every respect so artistic [sic] is never to be forgotten. I cannot, however, pass over one annoyance attendant upon my entrance into the Opera-house; I do not allude to the squeezing . . . but having arrived at the pay-office, I found the usual prices raised considerably.' If this eccentric 'F. P.' had waited till then to buy a ticket, he would have found none available, and been prevented from entering the Opera-house—a misfortune he does not record, though it is almost suggested by his delightful evasion a few lines lower: 'I forbear to enter into any detail of the opera, as it is all beautiful; and I am as anxious to witness the second performance as any of the Dresden-born burghers.' Surely 'F. P.' did not expect the next performance to be cheaper? In any case he might have cooled his heels by studying the playbill (see facsimile in Chamberlain's 'R. Wagner') and ascertaining that there never was a 'Der' in 'Richard Wagner's new opera "Der Tannhäuser, or the Contest of the Minstrels at Wartburg,"' also that the composer's niece was playing the unmentioned heroine—an item of more than usual interest—or have whiled away the vacant hours by investing in its cheap enough text-book, and thus learning that to mention Klingsor and the Trusty Eckart was to afford an unsuspecting British public 'ample scope for imagination,' indeed, but little notion of the 'subject' which 'this wonderfully talented man' had 'right poetically conceived and worked out.'

No: from its commencement 'Here I find myself in Dresden,' to the close of this long 'letter'—half of which is devoted to Beethoven's money-matters, by-the-way—there is not the smallest genuine indication that its writer had either been near the spot or drunk in one note of that 'era in music.' It is the purest flummery, doubtless concocted with the best intentions, perhaps at the request of secondary mutual friends, but whipped up from a teaspoonful or two of German press intelligence blent with conceivable shreds from a letter of August, or even Eduard Roedel's to his relations in England. In his boastful book itself Praeger has nothing to say of a visit to Dresden; on the contrary, dealing with the London Philharmonic offer to Wagner (winter 1854-55), says his p. 219: 'Nor did I know him personally; I was but the reflection of August Roedel,' sub-conductor at Dresden in the 'forties. How very pale and mediate was that 'reflection,' is proved once more by the above.

Well, ignoring the circumstance that my public challenge to attest existence of this 'vigorous article' had remained unanswered for twelve years (see p. 73 of my recent vol.), your reviewer thinks I should have made 'further investigations before casting an imputation on Praeger's veracity anent the production of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" at Dresden in 1845.' My reply is, that those further investigations, as really might have been foreseen, have left Praeger's veracity thereabout in still sorer case than before.

Yours obediently,

WM. ASHTON ELLIS.

August 11, 1906.

[Owing to a slip of the pen in our last issue (p. 540, col. 1, sixth line from the bottom), the year of Wagner's first visit to England was given as '1838' instead of '1839.'—Ed. M.T.]

QUEEN'S HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The twelfth season of Promenade concerts at Queen's Hall commenced on August 18, when the attendance was so large that all the seating accommodation was sold twenty minutes before the performance was timed to begin. The sale of subscription tickets is larger than in previous years, and there is every sign that these concerts are greatly esteemed by a wide circle of genuine music-lovers. This is a most satisfactory state of things, for the programmes are so cosmopolitan in character and their interpretation under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction is so excellent, that the performances cannot fail to exercise an educational influence and cultivate a taste for the best music.

The first of the novelties, produced on August 21, was Signor Ferruccio Busoni's orchestral suite formed from his incidental music to Gozzi's play 'Turandot.' This is based upon the fairy story of the Princess who will only give herself in marriage to the man who guesses correctly three riddles on pain of losing his head if he fail. Gozzi has placed the scene of action in Pekin, and the composer has indulged in a liberal use of Eastern scales and effects conventionally associated with Chinese music. The result is many passages more or less grotesque and bizarre; but however appropriate these may be when heard in the theatre they become monotonous in the concert-room, particularly as the thematic material is weak. The Suite consists of six movements, the most original being that headed 'Nocturnal Waltz,' which is peculiar and mystic owing to clever scoring. The natural interest of the suite indeed almost entirely consists in the instrumentation, which is tantamount to saying that the artistic value is small.

The 'Norfolk Rhapsody,' by Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, produced on August 23, proved a decided success, the composer being called to the platform and applauded with a spontaneity that testified to the pleasure experienced by the large audience. This reception of the Rhapsody is specially gratifying because the work is a serious attempt to use English folk-tunes as the basis of music of serious design. Five melodies of folk-songs recently collected by the composer in Norfolk have been utilized: 'The basket of eggs,' 'The captain's apprentice,' 'A bold young sailor he courted me,' 'Ward, the pirate,' and 'On board a '93,' and they are treated with a manifest desire to preserve and accentuate their respective characteristics. The model adopted is that of the Hungarian Rhapsody, but the melodies are thoroughly English in style and possess a distinctive character that endows the composition with significance. The salient points of the tunes have been deftly used in the development, and accentuated by the scoring, which is well balanced and picturesque. On the same evening was given the first performance in England of a Suite in F for oboe and strings (Op. 12), by Fini Henriques. This consists of three movements severally headed 'Prelude,' 'Intermezzo' and 'Finale.' The music is suggestive of Moorish influence and is pervaded by a gentle melancholy, a sentiment deepened by the weird tone of the solo instrument. The solo part was rendered in a refined and finished manner by M. Henri de Busscher. At this concert Mlle. Eve Simony, from the Monnai theatre, Brussels, made a very successful début in England, singing David's florid 'Couplets du Mysoli' with a purity of tone and executive finish that charmed her listeners.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

HELD AT CARNARVON, AUGUST 21, 22, 23, AND 24.

(By our special correspondent.)

It would be a rash task to attempt to give an adequate and intelligible description of this unique national function. The art energies, the ambition for recognition and distinction, the overpowering gregarious instincts of a fervid race find their vent at this extraordinary gathering. The towns of Wales compete ardently for the honour of being host. Eisteddfodau are held in Wales all the year round. But the smaller events are local, and simply serve to sort out the cream for the great and truly national gathering which is held alternately in North and South Wales. This year it was the turn of Carnarvon, a town which on five previous occasions has been chosen as the centre.

Carnarvon rejoices in the possession of a huge substantial pavilion, erected for the Eisteddfod in 1877. This building accommodates nearly eight thousand persons, and it is a testimony to the success of this year's gathering that it was crammed repeatedly during the morning, afternoon and evening meetings.

The musical section of the programme was that which, as usual, excited the greatest interest. It included, during the four days, instrumental and vocal competitions too numerous to describe in detail in this notice. Solo singing is pursued with almost passionate devotion in Wales. At Carnarvon the entries were as follows: solo singing, 170; duet and quartet, 39; pianoforte, 71; violin, 25; orchestral bands, 2; brass bands, 4; and choirs, 24. Compared with entries during recent years there was a falling off in the number of choirs. Besides the competitions—all of which were held during the daytime—there were four evening concerts. The tests chosen and the programmes of the concerts included much music of the cosmopolitan order mixed with a generous quantity of Welsh music. As the object of the whole event is the encouragement of native art both on its executive and creative sides, it is right that Welsh compositions should figure prominently in the scheme.

The chief musical event was the class for large choirs of from 140 to 160 voices. The test-pieces were a chorus 'The Lord is good' (David Evans); 'God in the thunder-storm' (Schubert) and 'Hilda' (J. H. Roberts). Two English and three Welsh choirs competed. A fine all-round performance of the three pieces secured the prize of £160 for the North Staffordshire District Choral Society (Mr. James Whewall). The Hanley and District Choral Society (Mr. John James) also sang with fine tone and expression, but the second prize of £25 was awarded to Llanelly Choral Society (Mr. John Thomas) mainly because they gave a masterly performance of the impressive Schubert chorus. Hanley, therefore, had to take the third place. The two other choirs were Cardiff Harmonic Society (Mr. Roderick Williams) and Holyhead (Mr. W. S. Owen). It is impossible to say to what extent the result may have been influenced by the high 'military' pitch adopted.

The choral competition next in order of importance was that for the men's-voice choirs, for which there were only four entries. The test-pieces were a descriptive chorus (unaccompanied) 'The rising storm' (Mathieu Neumann) and 'The village blacksmith' (Joseph Parry), an accompanied chorus in four parts. Cynon (Mr. W. T. Evans) was placed first, and Swansea (Mr. Llew. R. Bowen) second. The performances were good but not remarkable. The most notable result in the solo-singing class was the victory of Miss Mary King-Sarah, of Talsarn, who sang in the soprano, mezzo-soprano and duet (soprano and tenor) sections. In the ladies' choir section Llanbradach (Mrs. T. Moses) was the winning choir, and in the second section for mixed-voice choirs Tonypandy (Mr. D. Evans) was first, and Blackpool (Mr. H. Whittaker) second.

The strongest feature in the programme of the evening concerts was Elgar's 'Caractacus,' which was performed by the specially organized festival choir of about 250 voices, and the orchestral band of the Portsmouth Royal Marines (conductor, Lieut. George J. Miller, M.V.O.) with Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. David Hughes and Mr. D. Ffrangcon-Davies as soloists. This fine work was well performed under the baton of Mr. John Williams and seemed to give very great satisfaction to the vast audience assembled. A new cantata, 'Rejoice in the Lord,' by Mr. David Evans, was performed for the first time, and among the miscellaneous items in the programme were the overtures 'Tannhäuser' and '1812,' Mr. Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody, and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches. The advantage of having a well-trained unified band instead of the scratch band usually engaged at Eisteddfodau was distinctly obvious.

The adjudicators were Mr. John Thomas (Harpist to H.M. the King), Mr. D. Emlyn Evans, Dr. McNaught, Dr. F. R. Greenish, Mr. David Evans and Mr. A. Williams (bandmaster, Grenadier Guards). It is expected that a large surplus will be realized.

Next year the Eisteddfod will be held at Swansea, and in 1908 it will be held at Llangollen.

CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL.

CRYSTAL PALACE, AUGUST 25.

The musical interest of this important annual gathering consists of concerts and competitions. A junior choir of nearly 2,000 voices sang a selection of pieces under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Jeapes, with Mr. F. W. Holloway at the organ. The juvenile choralists were in their element in the amusing action-song 'The Farmyard.'

The adult choir sang the following pieces under the inspiring conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill:

Bring branches from forest ( St. John's Eve )	F. H. Cowen.
Sweet vales of Devon	Battison Haynes.
Come, live with me	Sterndale Bennett.
Lullaby	Arnold R. Mote.
Rowing homewards	F. H. Cowen.
Overture—Raymond	Ambroise Thomas.
Song of the silent land	John E. West.
Who shall win my lady fair?	R. L. de Pearsall.
To the virgins	Roger Quilter.
A hymn of the Home-land	Sullivan.
Sing a joyous roundelay	Barnby.
Sing unto God ( Judas Maccabæus )	Handel.

In the interpretation of the above selection the huge choir responded to Mr. Gill's beat with unflinching readiness, singing with good attack, expression, and phrasing. Perhaps the greatest effect was made in Mr. West's 'Song of the silent land' and Sullivan's 'A hymn of the Home-land.' The orchestra were very good in the 'Raymond' overture, and Mr. Frank Idle rendered good service at the organ.

Earlier in the day three musical competitions were held with the following results:

Junior Choirs (20 to 30 voices), for the 'Ideal trophy'—Dover choir (Mr. E. Ross).
Junior Choirs (30 to 40 voices), for the 'Plunkett Shield'—Stratford choir (Mr. A. Sears).
Senior Choirs (30 to 40 voices), for the 'Excelsior Shield'—Peterborough choir (Mr. W. J. Roberts).

Dr. E. H. Turpin adjudicated.

The 150th anniversary of the birth of Mozart has been celebrated during the past month at Salzburg, his native city, with all due significance. Performances of 'Don Giovanni' and 'Figaro' represented the operatic side of the master's genius, while his orchestral compositions, chamber music, church music, &c., were no less admirably interpreted at various concerts. Felix Mottl and Richard Strauss as conductors, and Camille Saint-Saëns as solo pianist (the E flat concerto), gave practical proof of their interest in the works of one of the greatest masters of music.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company completed, on August 25, a five weeks' season of opera in English, given at the Lyric Theatre. The performances, which have been most successful from the artistic as well as from the attendance point of view, included an interesting representation of Mozart's 'Figaro,' under the direction of Herr Richard Eckhold, who gave the work to the accompaniment of a small orchestra—twenty-four players—a judicious proceeding fully justified by the artistic results.

The death, on July 31, is recorded with regret of Mr. JOHN RUTSON, of Newby Wiske and Nunnington Hall, Northallerton, in his seventy-seventh year. A highly cultured amateur and a warm-hearted and liberal supporter of music, Mr. Rutson was a Director of the Royal Academy of Music and a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music. In those capacities his purse-strings were always unloosed to the necessitous student whose needs were brought under his notice, and so unostentatious were his benefactions in this respect that, except the recipients of his bounty, scarcely anyone knew anything about them. He was one of the founders and generous supporters of the Hovingham Musical Festival, and one of the last acts of his life was to send to all his tenants serial tickets for the approaching meeting to be held in October. Music, however, was not Mr. Rutson's exclusive interest in art: he was a painter of some merit, and the walls of his house are adorned with pictures from his brush, as well as by several valuable works by the great masters.

The Musical Union of Wellington, New Zealand, gave its first subscription concert of the season on June 7, in the Town Hall, before a large audience. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, Beethoven's eighth Symphony (three movements), a selection from Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' suite, and Elgar's 'Chant de matin' and 'Chant de soir,' all being admirably played by the orchestra of some fifty performers, conducted by Mr. Robert Parker. The choral portion of the programme included the beautiful 'Coronach' from Macfarren's 'Lady of the Lake,' the epilogue to Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' and, for the first time in New Zealand, Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The last-named work, given with much spirit by both chorus and orchestra, was started on its colonial career with great éclat, and a repetition performance in Wellington is already under consideration.

The '450th consecutive monthly concert' of the St. George's Glee Union (Pimlico), founded in 1869, was held at Caxton Hall, Westminster, on August 1. Congratulations thereupon to Mr. Joseph Monday, the honorary conductor for the past thirty years, and to the members of the Society. In recording this interesting and probably unique event it is pleasant to learn that 'the sole object of the Society is to promote a genuine love for art, chiefly by the practice and performance of concerted music in the form of glees, madrigals, and part-songs.' Long may the St. George's Glee Union flourish in the continuance of the good work it has done and is doing in the cause of vocal part-music.

The Society of British Composers has issued its first Year-Book (1906-1907). This publication (70 pages) contains: (i.) The prospectus and rules of the Society; (ii.) Lists of members, council, and officers; (iii.) Lists of compositions by members; (iv.) Classified lists of compositions. While this Year-Book is useful as a book of reference, it may be welcomed in the hope that its issue may be of practical benefit to the fifty composers, of whom five are ladies, whose works are therein catalogued. The hon. secretary of the Society is Mr. John B. McEwen, The Doon, Pinner, Middlesex.

A performance of the Rev. H. E. Hodson's cantata 'The Golden Legend' is announced to be given in the Town Hall, Cheltenham, on October 11, under the direction of Mr. C. J. Phillips, with a full professional band and soloists, the choruses being sung by the combined choral societies of Ledbury, Stroud and Tewkesbury. The proceeds, after defraying expenses, will be given to the Cheltenham Hospital.

M. Emile Sauret, having resigned his appointment at Chicago, has taken up his residence at Geneva with the intention of receiving a limited number of violin pupils.

Mr. Arthur H. Cross died, we regret to record, at Dersingham on August 25, he having held the appointment of organist of Sandringham Church for thirty years.

The portrait of Madame Carreño which appeared in our April issue was from a photograph taken by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.

Answers to Correspondents.

MUS. B.—Spohr's 'Christian's Prayer' (Vater unser, to the text of Mähmann) was composed by him in the spring of 1829. According to Spohr's own account it was first performed, with pianoforte accompaniment only, at Cassel, on St. Cecilia's Day, 1829, and subsequently given with full orchestral accompaniment at one of the winter concerts at Cassel. The first public performance of the work in England is said to have been at the Manchester Musical Festival, September 14, 1836, to an English version by Edward Taylor, afterwards Gresham Professor.

PRECISE.—(1) For simple organ pieces to follow Stainer's organ primer, see 'Twelve short and easy pieces' by Smart and the various books of the Village Organist. (2) The easy pianoforte pieces you seek may be found in the following: 'Eighteen little pieces' (Berger); 'Kinderleben,' four books (Kullak); 'Happy Thoughts' (Duncan); 'Ein Kinderfest,' books 1 and 2 (Krug); and 'Three pieces for children' (Oke).

ANJOU.—The following pieces, 'not too long,' may 'be successfully performed by an amateur orchestra of average ability, and numbering about twenty-eight performers': Festal March, and Gavotte (Elvey); Three Dances (German); Chanson de Matin, and Chanson de Nuit (Elgar); Greeting (Von Holst); Four English Dances, arranged for small orchestra (Cowen); Judex (Gounod); and Benedictus (Mackenzie).

M.A.—You will find excellent descriptions of old-time village church orchestras in Washington Irving's 'Sketch Book' and George Eliot's 'Scenes of Clerical Life' (Amos Barton). See also Mr. Spencer Curwen's 'Studies in Worship Music,' 1st series, in the chapter 'The old parochial psalmody.' You might find something bearing on the subject in the writings of Canon Overton.

X. Y. Z.—(1) The alto lead in Mendelssohn's chorus 'How lovely are the messengers' ('St. Paul') should be sung by all the altos, not as a solo. (2) Although the composer has not indicated a pause, probably because it might be unduly prolonged, a natural break in the strict time of the anthem suggests itself at the point you mention, before the 'Hallelujah.' (Stainer's 'What are these?')

B. H.—You are quite right in your surmise respecting the Guarneri violoncello which, according to The Times of June 1, is said to have been 'discovered.' The features of the instrument, as shown in the photographs of it, are unmistakably those of an English, and not an Italian violoncello.

DOUBTFUL.—There could be no objection to the repetition of the word 'rose' at the end of your song: it certainly would not have the effect of a thorn in your music, which we may rightly assume to be as sweet as the fragrance of the flower itself.

URANIA (MOMBASA).—As you have the names of the American periodicals and those of the cities at which they are published, there is no necessity to give the streets in which the respective offices are situated in addressing letters to the editors or publishers.

W. G.—(1) Josef Hoffmann's second Pianoforte concerto is not yet published. (2) Messrs. Novello will supply you with a list of selected pianoforte pieces by the composer you name.

ETIK.—There does not appear to be published a collection of fugues by various classical writers. Would not Bach's '48' answer your purpose? And have you seen Dr. Iliffe's analysis of those wonderful preludes and fugues?

W. G.—You will find the plot of Adolphe Adam's 'Le Postillon de Longjumeau' on p. 274 of 'The Standard Opera Glass,' by Charles Annesley, published by Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

A. D.—Messrs. Novello will supply you, upon application, with a list of 'Toy symphony compositions,' which includes the names of all the instruments required in their performance.

E. F. G.—Anyone 'who plays the piano rather better than the average amateur,' although his age is forty-four, can certainly improve his technique by practising scales and studies for one hour per day, if the practising is properly and thoughtfully done.

CARLTON.—(1) You will find some useful information concerning 'the flat singing of choirboys' in Mr. J. Spencer Curwen's 'The boy's voice,' also Sir George Martin's primer 'The art of training choir boys'; (2) Do not be hoodwinked by hoods.

H. V. C.—Yes: the Highbury Philharmonic Society, of which the hon. secretary is Mr. I. J. Sealy Kingscote, 88, Crouch Hill, N.

B. G.—'The Musical Directory,' published annually by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co., will give you the necessary information.

A FAIR.—Goss's hymn-tune setting of 'Praise, my soul, the King of heaven' is published separately by Messrs. Novello, price 4d.

W. D. P.—Pronounce the word 'winds' as in ordinary speech, not 'wynds.'

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO FOR STRINGS (QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

MINUET D'AMOUR (from the above):—

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE .. .. . 2s. od.
SMALL ORCHESTRA ARRANGEMENT (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

An additional Soprano Air, "SUN OF MY SOUL" has been included in the work.

"Choral Societies admire the Midland composer because he gives them good music without putting too great a strain upon executive means. The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts (5), 7s.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo, 2s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor has built a set of beautiful and most interesting orchestral variations on the theme of a negro song or hymn, beginning "I'm troubled in mind," which is almost certainly of purely African origin. As at first presented it does not seem very promising, but the composer does wonders with it and yet preserves its essential character throughout. His work is finely expressive, beautifully scored, and original in design.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer of "Hiawatha" gives us on the present occasion a set of Symphonic Variations on a negro tune which is said to be familiar in America under the title "I'm troubled in mind." The melody in question is characteristic in form and rhythm, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor makes play with it in his own picturesque fashion. . . . It has enough of barbaric suggestion, while both in the handling of the theme and the general orchestral current of the piece there is no want of variety. . . . The new Variations were well, even brilliantly, played; and the audience, in accordance with Philharmonic traditions, greeted them with quite a burst of enthusiasm.

STANDARD.

"Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air," by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, is a work based on a bold theme, which is a real negro melody, and developed with clever orchestration. Effective use is made of the brass and woodwind, especially in the section where the theme assumes a march character. The composer, who conducted, obtained a vigorous rendering of his interesting work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's brilliant talent for orchestral writing is well known, but it has never served him better than in this case. His variations show remarkable freshness and originality of design, and they are scored with an astonishing command of the secrets of tone-colour. At times the influence of Dvorák, particularly in his "New World" vein, is to be traced in the work, but there is no suggestion of anything like plagiarism, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is to be congratulated upon having produced a work which deserves to take a definite place in the modern orchestral repertory.

EVENING STANDARD.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Orchestral Variations on an African Theme" has a genuine negro melody for its chief theme, which is developed with much ingenuity and varied orchestral colour characteristic of the composer's style. It is an effective work which ought to become popular.

MORNING POST.

The work heard for the first time last evening is one of the most striking he has as yet written. The title is perhaps a little misleading. Announced in one place as "Orchestral variations on an African theme," it is styled in another "Symphonic variations on a negro air." The word rhapsody would, however, be more suitable to describe the very brilliant orchestral piece the composer has constructed upon a theme which, we are told in the excellent analytical notes by Messrs. F. Gilbert Webb and Edgar F. Jacques, is known in America under the title of "I'm troubled in mind." There is nothing dry or scholastic in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's treatment of this theme, which undergoes many and varied transformations at his hands. The scoring is admirable throughout and the work is instinct with life and vigour. Under the composer's spirited direction the piece received an excellent interpretation and was evidently greatly appreciated.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air" has his characteristic picturesqueness and fervour. There is real pulse in his music. . . . It contains some good melodic material, and works up to an imposing climax.

GLOBE.

His "Orchestral Fantasia on a Negro Melody" is quite in his old vein. The air itself is both quaint and beautiful, and in his treatment of it he has not only employed all the resources of modern art, but he has also succeeded in preserving its character with singular skill, and the Fantasia is as interesting and effective a piece of work as he has given us for some time.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The work is one of haunting beauty, built as it is upon a pathetic negro melody which runs throughout like a golden thread. Certain works by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor which have followed his ever popular "Hiawatha" have not completely commended themselves to our critical judgment; but here his old, fine inspiration seems to have returned to him, and he treats his subject not only in a finely melodic but also in a finely artistic manner. He worked the whole composition up very gradually, but very emotionally, to a fine artistic finish.

THE GUARDIAN.

The theme chosen by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a characteristically melancholy negro melody that does not at the outset appear very promising as the basis of modern variations. But the composer handles it with such spirit and resource, and adorns it with such a wealth of picturesque orchestration that the interest of the work never flags. The most attractive section is that which stands for the slow movement in the symphonic scheme, a passage of rich glowing melody, treated with much polyphonic ingenuity.

THE CANTICLES

POINTED FOR CHANTING.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

MUSICIANS IN THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

The jubilee of the foundation of the National Portrait Gallery furnishes a fitting opportunity for calling attention to some of the representations of musicians which adorn its walls. On March 4, 1856, Earl Stanhope, P.S.A., moved a resolution in the House of Lords whereby this interesting and valuable institution was founded. His Lordship had previously addressed a letter, of which the following is a draft, to his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, announcing his intention to invite public attention to the importance of forming a British Historical Portrait Gallery:

Grosvenor Place, February 27, 1856.

SIR,—I presume to send herewith to your Royal Highness the copy of a motion of which I gave notice last night in the House of Lords.

It would be most especially gratifying to me if your Royal Highness should be inclined to feel any interest in the idea.

It seems to me that if a space were at once obtained, a yearly grant of £500 in the estimates would suffice for purchases, and that the selection might be most properly confided to the present Fine Arts Commission, or any new commission over which your Royal Highness might be prevailed on to preside.

I am, &c.,

STANHOPE.

MADAME VESTRIS.
(MRS. CHARLES JAMES MATTHEWS.)

1797-1856.

(Photograph by Mr. Emery Walker.)

To this letter his Royal Highness was pleased to return the following answer, dated Buckingham Palace, the same day:

MY DEAR LORD STANHOPE,

I have to thank you for your letter, and can only say that your scheme has my entire concurrence, and that I shall be ready to give it any assistance that may be thought advisable.

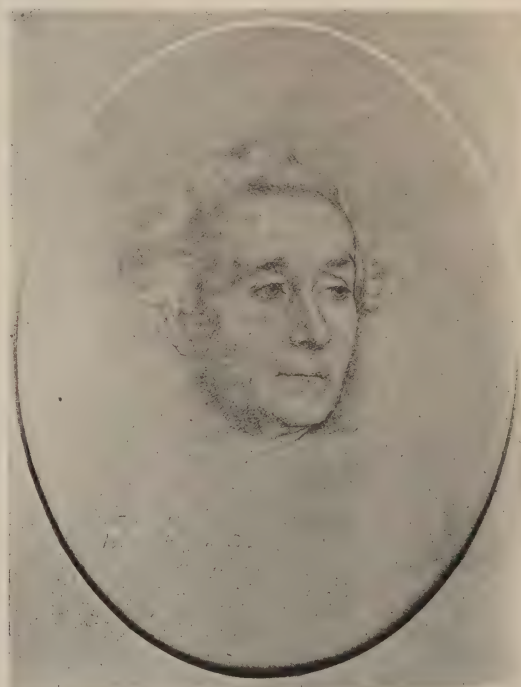

Ever yours truly,

(Signed) ALBERT.

B. P.  $\frac{27}{2}$ , 1856.

These letters are now exhibited to the public at the Gallery in connection with the portrait of the Prince Consort. The proposal met with the approval of the House of Commons: Parliament voted a grant of £2,000 for the first year's operations, and a Board of Trustees was appointed by a Treasury Minute. Temporary apartments were found for the pictures at 29, Great George Street, Westminster, and as soon as the Collection numbered fifty-six the public were permitted to view the portraits on two days in every week, the opening day being January 15, 1859. Eleven years later—at the close of 1869, when the portraits amounted to 288—the collection was removed to South Kensington, where it remained until the autumn of 1885. The outbreak of a fire in close proximity to the galleries occupied by the National portraits caused the Government to remove the collection to a place of greater security, with the result that its expense, provided that the Government would afford a site for it within a distance of a mile and a half from St. James's Street. In response to this munificent offer, the Government proposed to third home was the Bethnal Green Museum. In May, 1889, Mr. W. H. Alexander, of Shipton, Andover, Hants, made an offer to the Government to build a National Portrait Gallery at his own

Mr. Alexander a site at Trafalgar Square, immediately at the back of and contiguous to the National Gallery. This site he accepted, and the new building was commenced in October, 1890. Its total cost has been £96,000, of which sum Mr. Alexander provided £80,000 and the Government £16,000 to complete the east wing. The new National Portrait Gallery, now housed in a building worthy of its priceless treasures, was opened to the public on Saturday, April 4, 1896.

The portraits, busts, &c., under the charge of Mr. Lionel Cust, M.V.O., the director, keeper, and secretary of the National Portrait Gallery, number 1,450; of these about thirty are of musicians or persons closely connected with music. The place of honour must be accorded to England's first great composer, Henry Purcell. This splendid portrait of the master-musician (reproduced as the portrait supplement to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES) is by John Closterman, and is quite different from that by the same artist in the possession of the Royal Society of Musicians. Purchased by the trustees in November, 1903, from a family in whose possession it had been for two hundred years, the portrait is the original of the engraving contained in Purcell's 'Orpheus Britannicus' (1698-1702), and judging by the inscription on the engraving—'Henricus Purcell. Ætat. Sua. 37. 95'—it was painted by Closterman in 1695, the year of Purcell's death at the age of thirty-seven. The dimensions of the painting are 29 in. by 24 $\frac{1}{4}$  in.

The composer of 'Home, sweet home,' and of many glees, part-songs, songs, &c., is doubly honoured by having two portraits in the national collection—one by a painter unknown, the other probably by G. H. Harlow. The former is reproduced on p. 661. Sir Henry Rowley Bishop had a and to show that he knew whom he was greeting, although he could not recall the name, began to whistle 'Should he upbraid'!

It is not surprising to find that Handel is here duplicated—(i.) a painting by Hudson, one of the earliest acquisitions (No. 8) in the collection, and (ii.) a plaster bust, modelled by Roubiliac. Another non-native musician—who, like Handel, became a very important factor in English most successful career as a composer for the stage: he also preceded Sir Frederick Ouseley in the Professorship of Music at Oxford, thus affording a remarkable study in contrasts. There is a story told—we think it is of Rossini—to the effect that a foreign composer, whose memory for names was very treacherous, on meeting Bishop, shook hands, musical life—is Sir Charles Hallé, whose thoughtful features are here recalled in the fine painting by George Frederick Watts, R.A., who presented the portrait to the nation in 1895. While in the region of musical knights we are reminded of a nonagenarian musician in the portrait of Sir George Smart, painted by William Bradley.

Sir George was the butt of Thackeray, who named him Sir George Thrum, an alias very much akin to Strum. In his 'Ravenswing' Thackeray depicts the incidents of a musical party given by Sir George Thrum at his house in Great Portland Street. In the course of the evening, the host, addressing three of his guests, says: 'Miss Horsman, Mr. Craw, my dear Mrs. Ravenswing, shall we begin the trio? Silence, gentlemen, if you please. It is a little piece from my opera of the "Brigand's Bride." Miss Horsman takes the Page's part; Mr. Craw is Stiletto, the Brigand; my accomplished pupil is the Bride'—and the music began:

THE BRIDE (sings).
My heart with joy is beating,
My eyes with tears are dim.

As the first chairman of the Mendelssohn Scholarship Committee, Sir George Smart naturally leads to the first scholar elected under that Trust, Sir Arthur Sullivan, who bequeathed to the nation the portrait of himself painted by Sir John Everett Millais, P.R.A. This representation of a gifted composer is reproduced on p. 659. Although not a professional musician, Sir Thomas Gresham must be mentioned by reason of his having founded the Lectureships, of which music is one, associated with his name: Sir Thomas may, before very long, form the subject of a biographical sketch in these pages, when Sir Antonio Moro's splendid portrait of him will be reproduced as a special supplement. Another amateur, Sir James Hope Grant, G.C.B., painted by his brother, Sir Francis Grant, P.R.A., is very musically depicted. The famous general is represented playing his beloved violoncello, on which he was a first-rate performer. In this connection an interesting anecdote is told in the notice of him in the 'Dictionary of National Biography':

Major-General Lord Saltoun, a great lover of music, who had been appointed to command a portion of the British forces in the first Chinese war [1841], was in quest of a brigade-major, and Grant's musical skill would render him a welcome associate during the tedious sea voyage. This consideration, added to Grant's high military reputation, secured his appointment to the vacant post.

The features of three famous sons of song are to be seen—Charles Dibdin, in a painting by Thomas Phillips, R.A., and two Irishmen, Samuel Lover (by E. A. Foley) and Thomas Moore (by C. Moore) cut in marble. 'Tom Bowling' will long preserve the name of the first of this distinguished trio of musicians; Thomas Moore will surely not be forgotten, and who can restrain a smile in listening to Samuel Lover's 'Low back'd car'? Here is a typical verse:

Sweet Peggy round her car, Sir,
Has strings of ducks and geese,
But the scores of hearts she slaughters
By far outnumber these;
While she among her poultry sits,
Just like a turtle dove,
Well worth the cage, I do engage,
Of the blooming god of love.
While she sits in the low-back'd car,
The lovers come near and far,
And envy the chicken
That Peggy is pickin'—
As she sits in the low-back'd car.

A quartet of drawings by George Dance, R.A., portrays Dr. Samuel Arnold, a former organist of Westminster Abbey; Dr. Charles Burney, the historian of music; Charles Incledon, the singer, and William Shield, Master of the King's music and composer of 'The Thorn,' 'The Wolf,' 'The Arethusa' and many other songs and also operas. As a friend of Vincent Novello's, Shield must often have met Charles Lamb, who said, 'Shield has his merits, but Clementi, in my opinion, is far above in the Sostenuito.' Charles Lamb, most unmusical of men, knew absolutely nothing about 'the Sostenuito,' but that word was quite good enough for him to sustain his little joke.

The portraits of John Hullah (a pencil drawing by Sir W. B. Richmond, K.C.B., R.A.) and John Curwen (painted by William Gush) recall the heated controversy of fixed v. movable doh, and staff v. tonic sol-fa notations. 'Hullah's system,' as it was called, had a tremendous vogue in its day. As an instance thereof, the old clerk at Surrey Chapel—Carter Bunn Benn—named one of his sons Watts Hullah Benn, 'because,' he said, 'Watts wrote the hymns, and Hullah sang them.' It was at a conference of Sunday school teachers held at Hull, in September, 1841, that the Rev. John Curwen started his Tonic sol-fa propaganda, basing its notation on that which had previously been invented by Miss Sarah Glover, of Norwich (1785-1867), but which Mr. Curwen afterwards modified and changed until its present form was reached. The portraits of these two musical educationists are reproduced on p. 658.

At present ladies are only represented at Trafalgar Square by three of their sex—Madame Vestris (water-colour by A. E. Chalon, R.A.), Catherine Stephens, afterwards Countess of Essex (oil-painting by John Jackson, R.A.), and Mary Ann Paton (unfinished painting by Thomas Sully). Madame Vestris (see her portrait on p. 657) achieved fame as a singer and actress. Chorley, writing after her death, said: 'As a girl she was extremely bewitching, if not faultlessly beautiful—endowed with one of the most musical, easy, rich, contralto voices ever bestowed on singers, and retaining its charms to the last—full of taste and fancy for all that was luxurious, but either not willing, or not able to learn, beyond a certain depth.' Her name is associated with the singing of C. E. Horn's sprightly song 'Cherry ripe.' This song attained its popularity by being introduced (by Madame Vestris) into Poole's comedy 'Paul Pry'—first acted at the Theatre Royal, Haymarket, September 13, 1825—in which she took the part of Phœbe. The words do not appear in the comedy itself, and the song might never have become known had not Vestris taken a fancy to it and launched it on the sea of popular favour. 'Kitty' Stephens (as she was called) and Mary Anne Paton were no less beautiful in feature than in the tones of their lovely voices. Both ladies were opera singers and married into titled families. Miss Stephens espoused the widowed octogenarian Earl of Essex in 1839; he died a year later, and she survived her husband forty-three years; Miss M. A. Paton (afterwards Mrs. Wood), whose first husband was Lord William Pitt-Lennox, played the violin, could recite, and, as a singer, achieved great success as the heroine in Weber's 'Der Freischütz' at its first performance in England on July 23, 1824. While in this aristocratic region we may include, as a portrait closely connected with music, Charles Mordaunt, third Earl of Peterborough (painter uncertain), the husband of Anastasia Robinson, herself the daughter of a portrait painter, and one of Handel's most celebrated opera singers.

There only remains to be mentioned Dr. Arne—not altogether worthily represented by a caricature; Arthur Goring Thomas (drawn in red chalks by his brother Mr. Francis Inigo Thomas); John Gay (a beautiful but unfinished sketch in oils by Sir Godfrey Kneller); Dr. William Croft, as a chorister-boy (painter uncertain); and Thomas Britton, the musical small-coal man (painted by J. Woollaston). The portraits of Croft and Britton were reproduced in THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1900, and August, 1906, respectively.

In this brief account of musical subjects in the National Portrait Gallery it is hoped that enough has been said to call attention to a collection which is rich in historical and artistic interest, and well worth visiting; also that the present possessors of portraits of musicians and others may have their attention drawn to the fact that there is still space for further additions, musical and otherwise.

LADY VIOLINISTS.

Who was the first lady violinist? This interesting interrogation must be treated as a riddle and—given up! Certainly no attempt will be made to answer it in this chit-chat on fair fiddlers, nor is it proposed to exhaust a subject that so largely concerns the feminine mind. From the historical point of view it may suffice to begin with the time of Mr. Pepys. An extract or two from his entertaining Diary often furnishes useful information, and invariably provokes a smile. On June 6, 1661, Mr. Pepys records:

Here came two young gentlewomen to see Mr. Holland and one of them could play pretty well upon the viallin, but, how these ignorant people did cry her up for it! We were very merry. I staid and supped there, and so home and to bed. The weather very hot, this night I left off my wastecoat.

Here we have an early instance of an amateur lady violinist (or viallinist pace Mr. Pepys), and a little outburst of the Diarist's temper, with his inevitable 'to bed' reference, and the information, by inference, that he was in the habit of sleeping in his 'wastecoat.' Three years later—September 28, 1664, the Diary has the following reference to Mrs. Pepys's 'woman,' or lady's-maid to adopt present-day parlance:

At home I found Mercer playing on her Vyall which is a pretty instrument, and so I to the Vyall and singing till late, and so to bed.

Not only did Mr. Pepys and Mrs. Pepys's maid perform on the vyall, but in 1666 one Gregory instructed the spouse of the eminent Diarist in the art of playing on that instrument.

We may now turn from the amateurs of the 17th century to the professionals of the 18th. In this connection Dr. Burney ('History of Music,' iv. 647) gives us a vague and tantalizing paragraph which reads:

This and the preceding year [1721-22] Mrs. Sarah Ottey frequently performs solos at concerts on three several instruments: harpsichord, base-viol, and violin.

The worthy doctor might have given a more detailed reference to a lady whose name is absolutely unknown. However, a little research among old newspapers at the British Museum has resulted in unearthing the following advertisement from the Daily Courant of February 17, 1723.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF MRS. SARAH OTTEY.

At the Theatre Royal, in Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Tuesday, being the 27th February, will be perform'd a Comedy call'd Love makes a man, or The Fop's Fortune. In which will be perform'd several pieces of Musick on the Bass-Viol, Harpsichord, and Violin by Mrs. Ottey (being the last time of her appearing in Publick). With several entertainments of Dancing.

Tickets to be had at Mr. Williams's Coffee-house in St. James's Street, and at Mr. Ottey's at the Carpenters Arms in Honey-Lane-Market.

Here we have an instance of three-fold skill—a lady performer on a trio of instruments. Whether Mrs. Sarah Ottey's performances were sandwiched between 'Love makes a man, or The Fop's Fortune' and the 'several entertainments of Dancing,' or otherwise, is a matter of speculation. As to whether Mr. Ottey was the landlord of the 'Carpenter's Arms,' or whether he only temporarily resided at that hostelry, may be left to the investigations of some future writer, as may also Mrs. Ottey's first and earlier appearances as a bass-violist, a harpsichordist, and a violinist.

The venue may now be changed to Dublin, where, it will be remembered, Handel's 'Messiah' obtained its first hearing on April 13, 1742. In the same year, and only four months after Handel had left the Green Isle, a Miss Plunket, a lady violinist and a pupil of the celebrated Matthew Dubourg, then resident in the Irish capital, gave her first concert in Dublin on December 6, 1742, which is thus advertised in Faulkner's Journal of November 20:

By subscription, for the Benefit of MISS PLUNKET, at the Musick-hall in Fishamble-street, on Monday the 6th of December, will be performed a Concert of Musick; in which Miss Plunket will perform several new Solos and Concertos on the Violin. Each Subscriber to pay One Guinea for four Tickets. Single Tickets Three British Half-Crowns. Subscriptions are taken at Mr. Neal's in Christ-churchyard, and Mr. Manwaring's Musick Shop in College-green, and by Miss Plunket, at Mr. Dubourg's House in Henry-street.

On the day following the concert, Faulkner's Journal thus noticed the event:

Yesterday evening Miss Plunket had her first concert at the Musick Hall in Fishamble Street, at which there was a most polite and numerous audience, who were all charmed with her Performance on the Violin, and gave her universal applause.

Mrs. Storer sang three songs in the same concert, and gave general satisfaction to all present, who were highly pleased with her singing.

Miss Plunket returns her humble Thanks to all the Ladies and Gentlemen who pleased to honour her with their company.

Miss Plunket found her way to London—she appears to have added an extra 't' to her name during her passage across the Irish Channel—and gave 'A concert of musick' on February 27, 1744. The advertisements of the day thus announced the event:

At the particular desire of several persons of quality For the Benefit of Miss Plunkett at the New Theatre in the Haymarket, on Monday, February 27, will be perform'd a concert of musick with several solos and concertos on the violin by Miss Plunkett.

Tickets to be had of Miss Plunkett's Father's lodgings, the Bow-lamp in Pulteney Street.

Boxes Half-a-guinea. Pit and gallery 5s.

It would be interesting to know if Handel heard Miss Plunkett's performances, either privately at Dublin, or publicly in London, and to have his opinion on female fiddlers, as probably he would designate them.

Whatever fame can be placed to the credit of Mrs. Ottey and Miss Plunket, it is small compared with the wonderful achievements of Madame Mara, one of the greatest of vocalists who, however, began her triumphant career as a girl-violinist. As the story of the early years of her life is well recorded in the Harmonicon of February, 1828, no apology is needed for a quotation from that interesting musical journal:

Gertrude Elizabeth Mara was born at Cassel, the 23rd of February, 1749. She was the only child of Johann Schmeling, a musician of that place, and lost her mother shortly after her birth. Owing to his very limited means, her father was unable to bestow upon her the cares necessary at her tender age. His duties called him much from home, and, in his absence, the little Gertrude usually remained shut up in her solitary apartment. Thus cut off from the sports of childhood, she was obliged to seek amusement within herself. She recollects that there was an old family clock in the room, and one of her customary recreations was to sit and watch the vibrations of the pendulum, beating time to its motion with her head and hand. This had the effect of impressing her mind with a certain pleasing perception of rhythm, so that the first time she heard a performer upon the guitar, who was playing in the street, she ran to the window, mounted on a stool to get a sight of the musician, and beat the time on the window-ledge with a feeling of delight which was never after effaced from her mind. From this moment may be dated her love and disposition for music.

Her father had learned from an Italian the art of repairing musical instruments, and he converted this knowledge into a means of bettering the subsistence of himself and daughter. She used to seat herself on a high stool and watch him attentively while at his work. One day, he had just finished mending a violin, and then going from home, left it on his work-bench. The curiosity of a child led her to examine the instrument ; she was pleased with the sounds she drew from it, but, in a rather too violent pizzicato movement, broke one of the strings. Her father returned ; he scolded the presumptuous virtuosa, and threatened to punish her if ever she touched the instrument again. For some days the threat had its effect ; but her desire of hearing the pleasing sounds soon prevailed over the sense of duty, and again the delinquent was caught in the act of trying her hand upon the violin. The father approached her in a menacing attitude, as she stood trembling in a corner. "So," said he, "you have again disobeyed me ; now, as a punishment, I will make you learn to play that instrument." But what was his astonishment, when he saw her run, and, seizing it with eagerness, draw from it tones of a soft and pleasing kind ! The violin was now left at her free disposal, and, in a very short time, the assiduous scholar was able to run through the greater part of the scales with ease and correctness ; and but a few weeks more had elapsed, when little Gertrude was able to join her father in playing some easy duets.

The poor wee child, deprived of a mother's care, suffered from rickets, due, it is said, to her father's custom of securing his daughter in an arm-chair while he attended to his affairs. Even in her fifth year she could not stand without support, and she was obliged to be carried to the place where she had to play. At a fair held at Frankfort the clever little maiden's performances on the violin excited great wonder and admiration, so much so that a subscription was set on foot in order that she might receive a better education. At the age of nine, her health having greatly improved, Fräulein Schmeling went with her father to Vienna and gave some concerts there. The English Ambassador was so struck with the child's genius that he advised Schmeling to take her to England, and at the same time furnished him with letters of introduction to influential friends in London. The little lady seems to have made her first appearance in England as one of a quartet of prodigies, judging from the subjoined advertisement from the Public Advertiser of April 23, 1760.

By Particular Desire.

At the little Theatre in the Haymarket.

This Day, April 23, there will be a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music.

The vocal parts by Signor Tenducci, Signora Calori, and by Signor Qualici.

The Solos by young Performers, who never appeared in Public, as a solo of Signor Giardini's on the Violin by his Scholar Master Barron, thirteen years old ; a Lesson on the Harpsichord by Miss Burney, nine years old ; with a Sonata of Signor Giardini's accompanied by a Violin ; a Solo on the Violoncello by Master Cervetto, eleven years old ; a Duet on the Violin and Violoncello by Master Barron and Master Cervetto ; a Quartetto by Miss Schmeling, Master Barron, Master Cervetto, and Miss Burney. With several full Pieces by a select Band of the best performers.

The doors to be opened at five o'clock. To begin at seven.

Pit and Boxes laid together at Half-a-guinea. Gallery, Five shillings.

Tickets to be had at Arthur's, St. James's Street ; at Mr. Walsh's music-shop, Catherine Street ; at Mr. Johnson's music-shop, Cheapside, and at the Theatre ; where Ladies are desired to send their servants to keep places.

English dames of 'quality' in those days did not consider the violin to be suitable for ladies, so little Miss Schmeling forsook the career of an instrumentalist and became a queen of song. In that capacity she made a great name and plenty of money.

A lady violinist of quite a different stamp was a Mrs. Chazal, by birth an Italian lady. In Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (1st edition vol. i., p. 580b—the name is absent from the new edition) we read, above the signature of the late Julian Marshall :

Gambarini Signora, sang the part of 1st Israelitish woman in 'Judas' April 1, 1747. She was a soprano, but her name does not occur again.

(This was the first performance of the oratorio.) After her marriage the genius of Signora Gambarini appears to have considerably developed. Not only did she continue to sing, but she composed, played the organ, and—the violin ! An advertisement in the Public Advertiser of May 14, 1764, testifies to the combined accomplishments of this remarkable lady :

FOR THE BENEFIT OF MRS. CHAZAL.

At the Great Exhibition Room, Spring Gardens, this day the 14th of May, will be performed MRS. CHAZAL'S (late Miss Gambarini) GRAND CONCERT of vocal and instrumental music, by the best performers ; the first violin and a solo by Mr. Barthélemon ; to conclude with a Ball.

Act I. Overture with French Horns ; Ode on the occasion of Peace, composed by Mrs. Chazal. Grand Concerto on the organ, by Mrs. Chazal. Act II. Solo on the violin ; Italian song and Lesson on the Harpsichord, by Mrs. Chazal ; Concerto with Hautboys. Act III. Ode on the Accession to the Throne, composed by Mrs. Chazal ; Concerto on the organ by Mrs. Chazal ; Grand Concerto with French Horns and Kettledrums. The whole to be conducted by Mrs. Chazal.

☞ Tickets Half-a-guinea to be had at Mrs. Chazal's, the corner of Castle Court, opposite the new Exchange Buildings in the Strand, where are to be seen and sold, a capital collection of pictures from ten in the morning till four in the afternoon every day.

As Mrs. Chazal would make the entertainment as agreeable as possible to those who will honour her with their presence, she has engaged the following two celebrated singers : Signora Cremoni, and Signor Gustinelli.

In the study of any subject connected with art, the letters and journals of observant and trustworthy travellers are often of interest and value. Horace Walpole is a case in point. In 1769 he visited at Saint-Cyr, near Versailles, the home which the Marquise de Maintenon established for poor girls of good family, and he thus records his impressions in a letter dated September 17, 1769 :

The young ladies who were playing at chess, were ordered to sing to us the choruses of Athaliah ; in another room they danced minuets and country-dances, while a nun, not quite so able as St. Cecilia, played on a violin.

It should be remembered that Racine wrote his 'Athalie' for the young ladies at Saint-Cyr.

In 1770 Dr. Burney was in Venice, of which he says ('Present state of music in France and Italy') :

The city is famous for its conservatorios, or musical schools, of which it has four—the Ospedale della Pietà the Mendicanti, the Incurabile, and the Ospedaleto a S. Giovanni e Paolo, at each of which there is a performance every Saturday and Sunday evening, as well as on great festivals. I went to that of the Piùta the evening after my arrival, Saturday, August 4 [1770]. The present Maestro di Capella is Signor Furlanetti, a priest, and the performers, both vocal and instrumental, are all girls; the organ, violins, flutes, violoncellos, and even French horns, are supplied by these females.

Burney was so charmed with this feminine orchestra that he paid a second visit to the Piùta, and says :

The girls played a thousand tricks in singing, particularly in the duets, where there was a trial of skill and of natural powers, as who could go highest, lowest, swell a note the longest, or run divisions with the greatest rapidity. They always finish with a symphony; and last Wednesday they played one by Sarte, which I had before heard in England, at the opera of the Olimpiade. The band here is certainly very powerful, as there are in the hospital above a thousand girls, and out of these there are seventy musicians, vocal and instrumental.

At the Mendicanti a concert, which lasted two hours, was specially prepared for the benefit of the musical historian, who says :

It was really curious to see, as well as to hear, every part of this excellent concert performed by females—violins, tenors, basses, harpsichord, French horns, and even double-basses—and there was a prioress, a person in years, who presided; the first violin was very well played by Antonia Cubli, of Greek extraction. . . . It was here that the two celebrated female performers, the Archiapate, now Signora Guglielmi, and Signora Maddalena Lombardini Sirmen, who have received such great and just applause in England, had their musical instructions.

Another distinguished traveller, who visited Venice ten years after Burney, may be quoted. This is how William Beckford, of Fonthill, records his impressions of the lady orchestra at the Mendicanti institution in the year 1780 :

The sight of the orchestra still makes me smile. You know, I suppose, it is entirely of the female gender, and that nothing is more common than to see a delicate white hand journeying across an enormous double-bass; or a pair of roseate cheeks puffing with all their efforts, at a French horn. Some that are grown old and Amazonian, who have abandoned their fiddles and their lovers, take vigorously to the kettle-drum; and one poor limping lady, who had been crossed in love, now makes an admirable figure on the bassoon.

Lord Mount Edgumbe, in 1784, records a similar experience at the same place, when he had 'not only the pleasure of hearing a delightful selection of music, but the almost incredible sight of an entire orchestra of female performers . . . I have met with more than one female player on the violin who had received their instruction in them [the musical academies at Venice]. One of these 'female performers' was Maddalena Laura Lombardini de Sirmen (or Syrmen), born at Venice in 1735, and educated at the Conservatorio dei Mendicanti there. She subsequently studied with Tartini at Padua, who took a very great interest in his pupil. Not a few letters are extant in proof of this, one especially which gives to the fair player detailed advice as to her technical studies. This letter, though very long, we give in Burney's translation, because of its educational value to violin students :

Padua, March 5, 1760.

My very much esteemed Signora Maddalena,

Finding myself at length disengaged from the weighty business which has so long prevented me from performing my promise to you, I shall begin the instructions you wish from me, by letter; and if I should not explain myself with sufficient clearness, I entreat you to tell me your doubts and difficulties, in writing, which I shall not fail to remove in a future letter.

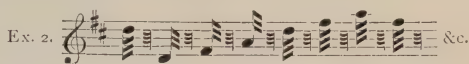

Your principal practice and study should, at present, be confined to the use and power of the bow, in order to make yourself entirely mistress in the execution and expression of whatever can be played or sung, within the compass and ability of your instrument. Your first study, therefore, should be the true manner of holding, balancing, and pressing the bow lightly, but steadily, upon the strings, in such manner as that it shall seem to breathe the first tone it gives, which must proceed from the friction of the string, and not from percussion, as by a blow given with a hammer upon it. This depends on laying the bow lightly upon the strings, at the first contact, and on gently pressing it afterwards; which, if done gradually, can scarce have too much force given to it—because, if the tone is begun with delicacy, there is little danger of rendering it afterwards either coarse or harsh.

Of this first contact, and delicate manner of beginning a tone, you should make yourself a perfect mistress, in every situation and part of the bow, as well in the middle as at the extremities; and in moving it up, as well as in drawing it down. To unite all these laborious particulars into one lesson, my advice is, that you first exercise yourself in a swell upon an open string—for example, upon the second, or la: that you begin pianissimo, and increase the tone by slow degrees to its fortissimo; and this study should be equally made, with the motion of the bow up, and down; in which exercise you should spend at least an hour every day, though at different times, a little in the morning, and a little in the evening; having constantly in mind that this practice is, of all others, the most difficult, and the most essential to playing well on the Violin. When you are a perfect mistress of this part of a good performer, a swell will be very easy to you—beginning with the most minute softness, increasing the tone to its loudest degree, and diminishing it to the same point of softness with which you began; and all this in the same stroke of the bow. Every degree of pressure upon the string, which the expression of a note or passage shall require, will, by this means, be easy and certain; and you will be able to execute with your bow whatever you please. After this, in order to acquire that light pulsation and play of the wrist from whence velocity in bowing arises, it will be best for you to practise, every day, one of the allegros, of which there are three, in Corelli's solos, which entirely move in semiquavers. The first is in D, in playing which you should accelerate the motion a little each time, till you arrive at the greatest degree of swiftness possible. But two precautions are necessary in this exercise. The first is, that you play the notes staccato, that is, separate and detached, with a little space between every two, for though they are written thus :

they should be played as if there was a rest after each note, in this manner :

but you must not rigorously move immediately from semiquavers to demisemiquavers, or from these to the next in degree; that would be doubling the velocity of the shake all at once, which would be a skip, not a gradation; but you can imagine, between a semiquaver and a demisemiquaver, intermediate degrees of rapidity, quicker than the one, and slower than the other of these characters. You are, therefore, to increase in velocity, by the same degrees, in practising the shake, as in loudness, when you make a swell.

You must attentively and assiduously persevere in the practice of this embellishment, and begin at first with an open string, upon which, if you are once able to make a good shake with the first finger, you will, with the greater facility, acquire one with the second, the third, and the fourth or little finger, with which you must practise in a particular manner, as more feeble than the rest of its brethren.

I shall at present propose no other studies to your application: what I have already said is more than sufficient, if your zeal is equal to my wishes for your improvement. I hope you will sincerely inform me whether I have explained clearly thus far; that you will accept of my respects, which I likewise beg of you to present to the Princess, to Signora Teresa, and to Signora Clara, for all whom I have a sincere regard; and believe me to be, with great affection,

Your obedient and most humble servant,

GIUSEPPE TARTINI.

After her marriage to Luigi de Sirmen—a violinist and chapel-master at Bergamo—Tartini's pupil visited England in 1771. At the Lenten Oratorios given in Covent Garden Theatre she played, between the parts of 'Judas Maccabæus,' a violin concerto of her own composition and was 'received with uncommon applause.' At her benefit concert in the same year—April 15, 1771—she played a pianoforte concerto, and two years later she appeared as an opera singer at the King's Theatre. In spite of her Tartini pupilage and great gifts, Madame Sirmen failed to hold her position as a violinist and she ultimately became a concert-singer at the Court of Saxony. Eitner (Quellen Lexikon) gives a list of her various compositions: six concertos for harpsichord; nine concertos for violin; six trios à deux violons et violoncello obligé; six duets for two violins, dedicated to the Duke of Gloucester, &c., some of which were published in London and one title-page describes the composer as 'élève du célèbre Tartini de Padone.'

Special interest is attached to the next lady in our survey by reason of her connection with Mozart and the creation of one of his most beautiful sonatas for pianoforte and violin. Born, in 1764, at Ostiglia, near Mantua, Regina Strinasacchi justified her name by becoming a queen of violinists. She received her education at one of those Venice music-schools already mentioned—the Conservatorio della Pieta, and at Paris. Good looking, attractive in manner, and a brilliant performer, the fair damsel won great admiration wherever she went. After having travelled through Italy she made her way to Vienna, and at the National Court Theatre in the Burg gave two concerts, on March 29 and April 24, 1784. She was then a girl of twenty summers. The young artist was most anxious to obtain a new piece for performance at her concert that would give distinction to the event and that she might play in conjunction with an artist worthy, by his reputation and talent, of such an honour. To whom should Miss Strinasacchi go but to Mozart? No one could so well satisfy her artistic vanity, and no name would look better than Mozart's by the side of her own in the programme. She therefore asked Mozart to compose a sonata for pianoforte and violin specially for the occasion, and to play it with her at her concert. Mozart, good-natured man, appears to have been unable at any time to refuse requests of this nature, quite regardless whether the favour asked of him was by one worthy or unworthy. And then no thought of remuneration entered his mind: he worked gratuitously for those who could not or would not pay, notwithstanding the fact that these repeated demands on his good nature were often inconvenient, not to say actually disagreeable. However, nothing but the most generous feelings animated the master in acceding to the wish of the fair young violinist. In a letter dated Vienna, April 24, 1784, Mozart said to his father:

We have here at the present time the celebrated Strinasacchi, from Mantua, an excellent violinist. Her playing is remarkable for taste and expression. I am composing a sonata, which we are to play together on Thursday, at her concert in the theatre.

Mozart's father endorsed the opinion of his son as to the young lady's interpretative gifts. He wrote from Salzburg (in 1785):

Every note is played with expression, even in symphonies, and I have never heard a more moving adagio than hers; her whole heart and soul is in the melody she delivers, and her power and beauty of tone are equally remarkable. I believe, as a rule, that a woman of genius plays with more expression than a man. (Otto Jahn's Life of Mozart: English edition, ii. 336.)

Could there be higher praise, and that from a father and son so eminently qualified to judge?

To return to the sonata. In the first place its composition required greater care than the odds and ends which Mozart threw off for the nonentities who pestered him for 'something from his pen.' Regina was an exceedingly fine performer, and was not Mozart himself to share her triumphs at the concert? It could surely not be any distrust in his own powers that caused him to delay putting pen to paper; but who knows, that terrible bugbear of procrastination, which so often sterilises the brain of the creative artist, be he musical or literary, may for the moment have atrophied his brain. At all events, he kept putting off the task of composition from day to day, until, at last, the morning before the concert arrived, and not a note had been written! Directly Regina learned the state of affairs she rushed in a state of desperation to Mozart. She fortunately found him at home, and, putting down her pretty foot, told him that she would not leave the house until she had, at least, obtained the violin part of the promised sonata! The master thereupon set to work, and as so often happens under such circumstances, with the most satisfactory results.

Having actually dragged the violin part out of the dilatory composer, the young lady began most diligently to practise her part, as she had only that evening and the following morning to prepare the work for public performance. Mozart, busy man that he was, forgot all about the rehearsal that had been arranged! but he happily appeared at the concert. To reproach him for not having rehearsed the work would have been useless, the best had to be made of a difficult situation—one that was fraught with great danger, considering the nervous tension of the girl violinist.

The performance of the specially-composed sonata began. The audience, ignorant of the conditions under which it was being presented, were lost in admiration at the wonderful manner in which the two artists interpreted the music and executed the most difficult passages. The Emperor, who occupied the Imperial box, scrutinised the performers through his glass, and in so doing thought he discovered that one of the pair of players—it is not difficult to guess which—had nothing but a sheet of almost blank paper on the music-desk. His Majesty was not mistaken. Mozart, having created the entire sonata in his wonderful brain, had not found time to write down the pianoforte part. The Emperor (Joseph II.) asked to see the music, only to find nothing in the pianoforte part but bar-lines and the violin notes. 'What! have you again let it come to this?' asked the Emperor. 'Yes, your Majesty,' replied Mozart, 'but not a single note has been omitted.' The sonata in question is the beautiful composition in B flat (Köchel No. 454, and No. 15 in the Peters edition). The autograph shows that Mozart afterwards filled in the complete pianoforte part in ink of a slightly different colour from that which he first used. Thus the state of the MS. at the first performance of the sonata can readily be seen.

Signora Strinasacchi interpreted the music of Haydn with great charm, its gay strains perfectly harmonizing with her vivacious temperament. She played his quartets at the Viennese Court and elsewhere with peculiar naïveté and humour, and was much applauded for her delicate and expressive rendering of a solo in one of them. Haydn made the acquaintance of Regina Strinasacchi at the lodgings of Michael Kelly, during the Irish actor's sojourn at Vienna. She—who is also said to have been an excellent performer on the guitar—married Johann Conrad Schlick, a distinguished violoncellist in the ducal chapel at Gotha, and died in 1823. Unlike nearly all lady virtuoso violinists, before and after her, she does not appear to have visited England.

No French artist has so far been introduced in this gossip on lady violinists. An interesting representative of the school was Madame Louise Gautherot, who, strangely enough, is not noticed by either Fétis or Grove, though her name appears in the 'Dictionary of Musicians' (1824). Mendel states that her birth-name was Deschamps and that she first appeared in 1783 at a Concert Spirituel in Paris. A pupil of Viotti, she doubtless profited greatly by the tuition of that great master. In 1789 Madame Gautherot visited England and made her first appearance at the first Professional Concert of the season given at the Hanover Square Rooms on February 9, 1789. The advertisements of the concert state that 'The Ladies' tickets are Black, and the Gentlemen's Red.' The Morning Post thus records the French lady's English début:

A Lady named Madame Gautherot appeared for the first time at this Concert, and exhibited very great abilities on the violin. Her style of performance was expressive, and displayed very great execution. The connoisseurs spoke of her in high terms.

Her second appearance was at one of the oratorio performances given during the season of Lent at Covent Garden Theatre. 'Oratorios,' says W. T. Parke in his 'Musical memoirs,' 'unexpectedly started up this season at Covent Garden Theatre at play-house prices.' It was at a 'Messiah' performance—February 28, 1789—that Madame Gautherot performed, when she played her solo between the parts of the oratorio. The Morning Post said:

Madame Gautherot's concerto on the violin was equal to any performance on the same instrument by the first musical master of the present times. The audience were enraptured with it, and the applause lasted for a long continuance.

We are also told that 'the band was uncommonly strong.' Parke, the oboist (already quoted from), says that while Madame Gautherot played 'a concerto on the violin with great ability, the ear was more gratified than the eye by this lady's masculine effort.' Again, referring to the same performer, he makes the anti-feminine remarks:

It is said by fabulous writers that Minerva happening to look into the stream whilst playing her favourite instrument, the flute, perceiving the distortion of countenance it occasioned, was so much disgusted that she cast it away, and dashed it to pieces. Although I would not recommend to any lady playing on a valuable Cremona fiddle to follow the example of the goddess, yet it strikes me that if she is desirous of enrapturing her audience, she should display her talent in a situation where there is only just light enough to make 'darkness visible.'

The year 1808 is given in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' as that in which Madame Gautherot died. It should be added that she played a violin concerto at the first concert conducted by Haydn in this country—at the Hanover Square Rooms, March 11, 1791.

The two portraits which illustrate this article are from the collection of Mr. Arthur F. Hill, who has kindly allowed their reproduction. That of Madame Gautherot (p. 665) is one of Bartolozzi's lesser known works and was published in 1791: it is the earliest known portrait of a lady violinist.

A FORGOTTEN CONCERT ROOM.

For the few people who are aware of the existence of Hickford's Room, its chief interest lies in the fact that in 1765 Mozart gave a concert in it shortly before he left England. It is not, however, generally known how very nearly it was the scene of his first public appearance soon after his arrival in this country in the spring of the previous year. The talk of the town was busy with the little boy, so extraordinarily clever and graced with such charming manners that all the Court ladies from the Queen downwards had already fallen in love with him. He had as yet only played before the King and Queen, and his father was waiting for a suitable opportunity to bring him before the public. This presented itself in May, 1764, when Signor Graziani, the violoncellist, gave his benefit concert at Hickford's Room. Leopold Mozart had done well in rather withholding his precocious son from performing before a large audience till the reports of his marvellous talents had been widely circulated about town and had excited general curiosity. Everyone now was anxious to see and hear this child who had already astonished and delighted the most accomplished musicians on the Continent.

It is quite certain that Graziani was eager to make sure of such an attraction for his concert, and he advertised it widely beforehand, mentioning 'A Concerto and Solo on the Harpsichord by Master Mozart, who is a real Prodigy of Nature; he is but Seven years of age, plays anything at sight, and composes amazingly well. He has had the honour of exhibiting before their Majesties greatly to their satisfaction.' In a later announcement he speaks of 'Master Mozart, a Boy, who is Seven years old, and allowed by Everybody to be a Prodigy for his Age.' Some of the best soloists in London performed at this concert, including Giardini, and Florio the well-known flautist. The singers were Signoras Sartori and Cremonini, and Signor Maziotti. The Opera band was engaged to accompany the concertos and play 'A full piece.' The tickets were half-a-guinea each, but there can be no doubt that they were all sold, and that the habitués of our concert room eagerly awaited the appointed day on which they should become acquainted with this 'Prodigy of Nature.' Alas! they were doomed to disappointment. Things did not turn out happily for Signor Graziani. To begin with he had to postpone his concert from the 17th to the 22nd of May on account of the pre-engagement of the Opera band, and on the morning of May 22 his subscribers beheld an ominous statement at the end of his advertisement as follows:

I had declared in the Public Advertiser of May 17 Mr. Mozard; but as he is sick I cannot promise that he will play.

Poor little 'Mr. Mozard' was indeed sick, and as everyone knows his appearance in public was delayed for another fortnight and did not take place at Hickford's Room, but at the Great Room in Spring Gardens. In connection with Mozart another violoncellist may be mentioned, Signor Cirri, who made his first appearance at Hickford's on May 16, 1764, the occasion of Mr. Marella's benefit. Mr. Marella played the violin and the viol d'amore and performed his own compositions on both instruments. Signor Cirri was also a composer, for Mr. Marella states in his programme:

A Solo on the Violoncello by the famous Signor Cirri lately arrived from Italy, this being the first time of his performing in Public in England: This Solo and Overture of Signor Cirri's Composition.

If Cirri was famous in his own country he sustained his reputation here. He immediately became popular and during many years was engaged by the best artists in London for their concerts. He played at the first concert given by Mozart and his sister in the following June, and he was associated with them the next year at Hickford's Room when they bade farewell to the English public that had tired of their performances.

Hickford's Room was a very favourite resort of violoncellists, of whom there were many at this particular period. Besides those already mentioned, Scarpettini, the two Cervettos, and Sipurutini all gave concerts in Brewer Street. Young Master Crosdill appeared at Sipurutini's concert, and with that master played a 'Duetto for two violoncellos.' It was a very good concert this, the instrumentalists were of the first rank, including the violinist Barthélémon, and the 'Vocal Parts by three Capital Performers, whose names on Account of their Engagements at the Theatres, Mr. Sipurutini is not Authorised to publish.'

The violoncello has long entirely superseded the viol da gamba as a bass instrument in all music for strings, but in the middle of the 18th century both were in common use. The violoncellists were principally Italians who had studied in their own country, but who upon arriving in England found life here so much more profitable that they generally remained here, if not for life at least for many years, teaching, and playing at concerts and the theatres. It is possible the viol da gamba might sooner have gone out of fashion but for the famous Abel, whose beautiful playing never failed to move and delight his audience. The walls of the Brewer Street concert-room have echoed many times to the tender, plaintive tones of his instrument; sometimes in flowing adagios that he above all others knew how to interpret, sometimes in gay suites of the old dances that set little feet in high-heeled shoes tapping on the floor.

The year 1766 brought with it several interesting musical events. In February a remarkable concert was announced:

For the Benefit of the Brothers Colla, Italians, Lately relieved from Slavery in Algiers, by the King of Poland.

At Hickford's Great Room in Brewer Street,

This Day the 18th of February will be a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music. Under the Direction of Signor Vento.

The Vocal Part by Signora Frasi. Several Solos and Concertos by the said Brothers Colla, upon the Calascioncino and Calascione, both Instruments of Two Strings, of a quite new Construction. First Violin Signor Barthelemon who will likewise play a Solo, A Concerto on the Violoncello by Signor Cirri, A Concerto on the German Flute by Mr. Tacet, A Concerto on the Oboe by Mr. Eiffert.

To begin exactly at seven o'Clock.

Tickets Half a Guinea each; to be had at the Prince of Orange Coffee House in the Haymarket; and at the Brothers Colla, at Mr. Michelli's opposite to Bertrovalli's Italian Warehouse in the Haymarket.

The Brothers Colla have had the Honour to perform before their Majesties, as well as in all the foreign Courts in Europe, where they met with great Encouragement; their Instruments being very extraordinary, and their Execution surprising.

Any Gentlemen or Ladies that are desirous of hearing them in private, by sending a line to the Above Places, may be waited on immediately.

There can be no doubt that there was a crowded attendance at this concert. The Italians took the town by storm; their instruments were so strange, their story so romantic. Captured by some of the pirates who infested the Mediterranean and sometimes even ventured into the English Channel, the brothers had been kept prisoners in Algiers, a place known but little by English people in those days and of which many strange stories were told. The King of Poland, by whom they were released from their state of slavery, was the unhappy Stanislaus Augustus, the last monarch who occupied the throne of that ill-fated country. He was a man of refined and elegant tastes, but a weak and incompetent ruler and far more fitted for a student than a king. It is impossible to say how the case of the Brothers Colla came before his notice, and whether the cause of their release was of a political or private nature. The remarkable instruments introduced by these two picturesque figures were of the lute family. The calascione is mentioned by Father Bonanni, writing in 1722, as being then in use in the kingdom of Naples, and a modern author speaks of it as being still employed in Sicily. But all writers are agreed as to its Eastern origin in common with other forms of the lute. It belongs to an exceedingly old type possibly derived from the ancient Egyptian nofre, having a comparatively small body and a neck five or six feet in length provided with frets. The number of strings was generally two, sometimes four or six, and it was played either with a plectrum or with a quill. It was in common use in the 18th century in Turkey, Egypt, and the countries along the North African seaboard, and very similar to if not identical with the tambourra of to-day. No doubt the calascione was introduced into Sicily and Southern Italy by the Saracens, but it seems never to have travelled far northward nor to have appeared previously in England, where various other kinds of lute were common enough. The calascioncino was, as its name signifies, a small variety of calascione. After their first appearance the Brothers Colla are to be found playing at a great many concerts at Hickford's Room, and other places besides. Their history and experiences surrounded them with a kind of mysterious atmosphere that imparted a delicate distinction to the occasions on which they appeared in public. Every concert-giver of reputation, every newcomer was anxious to secure their services, so sure were these wonderful brothers to draw a good audience.

Music in those days did not escape the prevailing craze for novelty. A new composer, a new performer, a new kind of instrument, would excite an enthusiasm hardly intelligible to us. The novelty might soon pall, but while it lasted it was enjoyed with a zest almost childish in its keenness. Perhaps the success of the Brothers Colla with their curious lutes encouraged other players on similar instruments to come to England. There was, for a time, something of a revival of interest in certain members of the lute family which had fallen into disuse in this country when the violin took the leading place among stringed instruments. The mandoline, one of the small lutes still common in Italy, was not very widely known here, and a certain Signor Leone appears to have been one of the first persons to introduce it to a London audience in 1766. He was fortunate in securing Hickford's Room for his concert, the direction of which he placed in the hands of Signor Vento. Every possible attraction figured in the following programme, and the Miss Polly Young mentioned was a very favourite singer who shortly after this concert became Mrs. Barthélemon:

ACT I.

Overture of Signor Barthelemon.

Concerto on the Violoncello by Signor Cirri; Song by Miss Polly Young. Concerto by the Signors Colla on Two extraordinary Instruments of Two Strings called the Calascione and the Calascioncino. Solo on the German Flute by Mr. Tacet. Concerto on the Violin by Signor Oliver, a Spanish Musician. Solo on the Mandolin by Signor Leone.

ACT II.

Full Piece of Signor Barthelemon; Duetto on Two Mandolins; Concerto on the Harpsichord by Mr. T. Smith, a German Musician who never performed in Public. Solo on the Calascioncino, Solo by Signor Barthelemon, air by Miss Young. Solo on the Mandolin by Signor Leone. Conclusive Full Piece of Signor Barthelemon.

This banquet of delights had however to be delayed for eleven days on account of a change in the arrangements at the Opera, where Barthélemon was leader of the band. Signor Leone was seriously put out at this disturbance of his plans, and for fear of displeasing his patrons thought it wise to publish the following elaborate apology:

Mr. Leone begs Pardon of the Nobility, &c. (that favour him with their Protection) for disappointing them of the Concert he intended on Thursday the 6th of March, but the Opera being postponed to that Day, on account of the Indisposition of Signor Elisi, he found himself under a Necessity of deferring his Concert till Monday the 17th Instant, as he could not procure an Orchestra worthy of the Audience he flatters himself will honour him with their Company. Nothing but the Day is altered and Tickets for Thursday will be equally admitted with those of the Day.

It is certain that the 'Nobility, &c.' granted their protection to Signor Leone on this occasion, and that he pleased them with his performances on the mandolin, which for some years enjoyed considerable popularity. The mandolin appeared at various concerts, and was also introduced on the stage in some of the 'masques' and plays of a pastoral nature. In one of these plays it is particularly stated that 'a Concerto on the Mandolino will be played by a Shepherdess accompanied on the Violin by a Shepherd.'

A few weeks after Signor Leone's concert another mandolin player, Mr. Francis, tried his fortune at Hickford's Room. He also was assisted by Barthélémon, Cirri, Tacet, and the Brothers Colla, while his own share in the entertainment consisted of 'A Solo and Concerto on the Mandolin composed and performed by Mr. Francis who never performed before in Public.' His name does not appear at any subsequent concerts, so it may be possible that he did not make a great impression on his audience, who perhaps preferred the performances of Signor Leone.

In 1773 Mr. Weiss, 'Lutist to his Electoral Highness the Elector of Saxony,' gave a concert in Brewer Street, and his skill was much admired. But by this time the lute with its limited executive capacity could only be regarded as an interesting curiosity, and never again came into general use in England. Another stringed instrument frequently heard here was the harp, which had been steadily gaining favour since the middle of the 18th century. It was for many years always spoken of as the 'Welsh' harp, and with perfect justice. It had been the national instrument in Wales since the days of the old Druidical bards, and it owed its introduction to and popularity with London concert-goers largely if not entirely to the eminent harpist John Parry. Born at Ruabon in North Wales, he spent his early musical life as domestic harper in a well-known Welsh family. He came to London, however, before the middle of the 18th century and soon attracted the notice of musicians, Handel among the number. He devoted himself to making his instrument known to the public by giving concerts and teaching. He also wrote and published a number of compositions for the harp. Most of his concerts were given at Hickford's Room, and judging by their number and frequency must have been attractive. He may be said to have invented that form of entertainment now known as the 'recital,' for he appears to have been the first person to give concerts devoted to performances on one kind of instrument. He had given many benefit concerts in Brewer Street, in conjunction with other artists, before his first series of harp recitals in 1766. For these he issued the following remarkable prospectus :

BY AUTHORITY.

Mr. Parry humbly presuming, that by a sole Attention for a long Series of Time to the Welsh Harp, he has brought that Instrument (so much the Delight of our Ancestors) to a Greater Degree of Perfection than it has heretofore attained but at the Same Time regretting that the Powers of it are not so universally known as he conceives they merit, he with great Respect proposes to entertain the Nobility and Gentry on the following Conditions, which he flatters himself will be more pleasing to the Town in general than his annual Concert, by affording him a more favourable Opportunity of evidencing the Beauty and Effects of two Harps by himself and his Son, than when accompanied with other Instruments.

CONDITIONS.

To perform seven Mornings on two Harps, in Parts once a Week, at Hickford's Great Room in Brewer Street. To begin on Tuesday March 4th at Twelve o'Clock. The Subscription One Guinea for the Whole, for which a Ticket will be delivered for each Morning, to admit one Gentleman or two Ladies. No Money to be taken at the Door. Subscribers may lend their Tickets to their Friends, but none to be admitted Without a Ticket.

Subscriptions to be taken by Mr. Parry at Mr. Woodhouse's in Broad Street, Carnaby Market.

Another series of harp recitals was given in Brewer Street some years later by Parry's blind pupil Bromley, sometimes called Broomley. Bromley appeared when quite a boy at Hickford's Room in company with other pupils of Parry, and in his later years he became almost as great a public favourite as his celebrated master.

It may almost be said that the old concert-room was the London home of the Welsh harp in the 18th century, so many were the concerts there at which it formed the principal attraction. In addition to Parry, other well-known Welsh harpists performed there at various times, the most famous being Messrs. Gwyn, Evan Evans, and Edward Jones.

Mr. Jones was a very distinguished performer. He did not appear in London till the latter part of the century, giving his first concert at Hickford's in 1775, when he is described as 'Professor on the improved Welsh or Pedal Harp.' He had the assistance at his concert of some of the finest artists at that time in London: Kammell playing the violin, the younger Cervetto the violoncello, and Muzio Clementi, then in the first flush of his youthful fame, the harpsichord. Mr. Jones gained great favour at Court, where a few years later he held at least two appointments, one of them being that of Bard to the Prince of Wales.

The famous performers, Bach and Abel, conducted and performed at many concerts in this room, and as early as 1767 the two friends were playing here at a concert given by Signora Scotti just before she left England. Although Hickford's Room was then at the height of its popularity as a concert room, some of the opera singers preferred to give their concerts at the music room in Dean Street, or at Almack's, where the great room of ninety feet in length offered more scope for the display of their vocal powers and accommodated a much larger audience. No doubt these considerations influenced Signora Scotti on the occasion of her last benefit, for she announced her intention of holding it at Almack's and issued tickets accordingly. After she had made all her preparations, however, she discovered that she could not have the room under any conditions. She then tried for Dean Street, but with no better success, and to her chagrin had to fall back upon the room in Brewer Street. How great was her mortification may be seen from an advertisement she caused to be inserted in the daily papers, running thus :

Signora Scotti having fruitlessly made several attempts to obtain either the Room at Almacks or Soho for the Reception of those Friends who have done her the Honour to take Tickets for her Benefit, and not being able by any Interest of hers to obtain them, she intreats the Indulgence and Protection of her Friends at Hickford's Room in Brewer Street. This day the 15th of May, when she proposes to entertain them in the best Manner she can. Mess. Abel and Bach have generously promised to give each of them a Solo Performance, viz: a Concerto on the Harpsichord by Mr. Bach; a Solo on the Viol di Gamba by Mr. Abel.

The performance to begin at Seven.

Tickets to be had at Half a Guinea each, at the Naked Boy, Queen Street, Golden Square. The Tickets given out at Almacks will be taken for Hickford's Room.

Signora Scotti hopes the Nobility and Gentry will honour her, it being her last performance in England, which will lay her under great Obligations.

Bach and Abel were then conducting a series of concerts at Almack's and were immensely popular as performers. Any concert with which they were connected was sure to be a success, and Signora Scotti showed she was well aware of this fact by her special mention of their names in her advertisement.

Among the many memorable occasions on which Bach and Abel performed at Hickford's Room, one in 1773 is particularly noteworthy. This was the first public appearance in London of Wilhelm Cramer, the violinist, father of the well-known pianist and teacher Johann Baptist Cramer. Wilhelm, already a virtuoso violinist of considerable reputation in Germany, came to England in 1772 and settled in London with his wife and Johann Baptist, then but a year old infant. His beautiful playing so quickly won for him the admiration and respect of musicians that he was able to gather round him a distinguished little company of artists for his first concert. In addition to solos by Bach and Abel we find 'A concerto on the German Flute by Mr. Tacet, a solo on the Violoncello by Mr. Crossdill, a concerto on the Bassoon by Mr. Eichner, a Concerto on the French Horn by Mr. Spandau and a concerto on the Hautboy by Mr. Fischer.' Cramer himself played a solo and concerto on the violin, and songs were contributed by Mrs. Bach (better known under her maiden name of Grassi) and Signora Galli who, though advancing in years, still sustained the reputation of her younger days. It is to be noted that on this occasion Bach played a solo on the 'Piano Forte,' whereas he is generally mentioned as performing on the harpsichord.

Cramer rapidly rose to the position of leading violinist in London, and during the next few years he held his yearly benefit concerts at Hickford's Room, under the direction of Bach and Abel. But the room was beginning to prove too small for the class of concert then coming into public favour, in which orchestral music was far more prominent than hitherto. It became necessary to increase the number of players in the orchestras for the performance of works of a symphonic character, and more platform space was required than Hickford's Room afforded. The demand for a spacious concert-room, with a good platform and plenty of seating accommodation, led to the building of the Hanover Square Rooms. They were opened in 1775, after which date all the best concerts in London were gradually transferred to them. No doubt this was one of the contributing causes to the abandonment of Hickford's Room as a fashionable place of resort, but it was not the only cause. In the latter years of the 18th and the early part of the 19th century there were many alterations at the west end of the town, and the building of Regent Street, the designs for which were accepted by Parliament in 1813, gave rise to an extensive migration of society to the more recently built houses west and north of the new thoroughfare. The streets adjacent to Golden Square were given over to commercial uses, many of the fine old houses were let out in tenements or turned into shops, and the neighbourhood rapidly went down in the social scale. Perfectly hidden from view by the square house in front of it, there was nothing to draw attention to the once famous little concert-room in Brewer Street, and it became completely forgotten. Even the few people who chanced on a passing reference to the name in some old musical record were ignorant until quite recently of its present existence.

Many concerts and entertainments other than those already described took place there; but the examples quoted are enough to show the important part borne by this beautiful little room in the musical and social life of that remarkable period of its history. It is the last remaining link that unites a great musical past with to-day. Every earnest and true lover of music will hope sincerely that the old room may be preserved for the sake of its association, not only with Mozart, but also with others who have done so much to further the progress of music in England.

BERTHA HARRISON:

He set the reed-pipe to his lips, and lo!
The wreck of landscape took a rosy glow,
And Life and Love, and gladness that Love brings Laughed in the music like a child that sings.

Austin Dobson.

Occasional Notes.

The mavis sings his glorious roundelay,
The thrush, in yonder bush will have his say—
In spite of critics wise and doctors deep,
Who prate for canons till we fain would sleep.

The merry songsters, void of doubt or care,
Blithe as the sunlight and as free as air,
Sing all unsought, because they needs must sing,
In joy and love, until the heavens ring.

And is true genius not akin to these?
Did simple Mozart merely write to please
Those critics who, to show their wit, must needs
Seek reasons strange to him who wrought the deeds?

To one such critic—'twas this very day—
Methought I heard the wond'ring mavis say:
'You find too many thoughts in song so small—
An' were they mine, I could not sing at all.'

The Dean of Gloucester preached a very remarkable sermon at the opening service of the Hereford musical festival. Dr. H. D. M. Spence-Jones, whose erudition as an historian is well known, made special and interesting reference to Romanus, of either the 5th (or 8th) century, who is described in Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology' as 'the chief of the Middle School of Greek hymn-writers.' Before making mention of Romanus the Dean thus referred to Chrysostom and Basil and their influence in formulating the services of the church:

It must be remembered that this was the first century of the victory of Christianity, and that the organization of Divine Service, which would at once attract and elevate the crowds now pressing into the ranks of Christians, was among the tasks which belonged to an eminent Church leader like Chrysostom. During the years of his holding the great office of Archbishop of the New World-Capital he did much to order and arrange the Liturgy and its forms for the new triumphant Faith. He inherited here the tradition of the famous Basil, who some twenty years earlier, in his own city of Caesarea, had first hammered out the thought of 'a service' at once noble and winning; for crowds of men were beginning in good earnest in the second half of the 4th century to enrol themselves in the Christian ranks. In these services Basil, who ranked as the foremost prelate of Christianity, felt that music must play a prominent part; psalms must be chanted, and hymns written; hymns which could touch the hearts of all sorts and conditions of men in their sorrow and in their joy.

The wise and far-seeing Chrysostom, who succeeded to Basil's wide influence and had entered into a far larger inheritance of power, developed the ideas of Basil, and through his influence music and singing formed an important part of each service in the churches of Constantinople.

The Dean—who takes the earlier date of Romanus—then went on to say:

Before, however, the 5th century had run out—some forty years after the remains of Archbishop Chrysostom were laid with all honour in the Church of the Apostles, a great poet and hymnologist arose, Romanus 'the Musician,' as he has been ever termed in the Eastern Church, for which he wrote so much.

According to Dr. Julian, Romanus is said to have written 1,000 sacred poems (Contakia). Dr. Spence-Jones describes him as 'Romanus the musician'— who composed an oratorio entitled 'The Apostles'!—one who 'may be styled the founder of the once famous school of Constantinopolitan religious drama which flourished in the Imperial city for more than 600 years, and which occupied an important position among liturgical developments in that magnificent centre.' Moreover, Romanus was 'the ancestor of the Mystery Play and of the oratorio composers of our own day.' Therefore, as the Dean said:

When critics, with more zeal than knowledge, are disposed to question whether these great religious dramas, with all their glorious surroundings, to which this solemn service to-day is the introduction in your Hereford, properly belong to a cathedral service—the scholar smiles, and asks whether the example of Constantinople, the religious city of the world par excellence—the city which night and day dreamed of Christian mysteries and Christian service, may not fairly be appealed to. Surely, as in Constantinople 1,500 years ago, so now in England in our own day, at times the Cathedral for these great works of prayer and praise emphatically is the rightful home.

This eloquent discourse is full of encouragement to those lovers of music who would preserve the musical festivals in our cathedrals, and who must be grateful to the Dean for bringing forward such an ancient and interesting authority for their justification and continuation. The preacher concluded with a fervent and touching appeal to the generosity of the great congregation by asking them to contribute liberally to the collection for the widows and orphans of the clergy of the diocese of Hereford.

Monsieur Weckerlin, chief librarian of the Paris Conservatoire de Musique, has discovered the autograph of a biography written by Berlioz of himself, published by his friend Joseph d'Ortigue, and under the name of the latter in the Revue de Paris of 1832. The composer thus describes his personal appearance:

Berlioz est d'une taille moyenne mais bien proportionnée cependant, à le voir assis, et sans doute à cause du caractère mâle de sa figure, on le croirait beaucoup plus grand. Les traits de son visage sont beaux et bien marqués; un nez aquilin, une bouche fine et petite, le menton saillant, des yeux enfoncés et perçants, qui parfois se couvrent d'un voile de mélancholie et de langueur.

And an account of his 'Fantastic' symphony will, no doubt, be read with interest, although in an English translation. 'The Symphonie fantastique of Berlioz is by no means a frame cut beforehand with its four sides; one for the allegro, a second for the andante, a third for the scherzo, and the last for the final allegro. It is not a kind of table fitted up with cases and compartments, each one labelled and numbered, into which the composer, according to symmetric laws, and following traditional custom, sets, here the exposition of the subject; there, an harmonic progression; farther on a melody in the dominant key; elsewhere the recapitulation of the same melody with counterpoint, followed by a peroration and the requisite developments. The plan of the symphony is free and complete, just as the thought of the author is free and complete, in its course. The fantastic symphony is a drama, a picture, a poem. It is a passionate dream, poetic in imagination and in heart which Berlioz explains to us by means of music. He takes a réalité of his life, he works it up in his mind, he elaborates it by means of his art, and there is his symphony.'

An 'Occasional Note' may serve to supplement the article on 'Wagner's music in England,' which appeared in our September issue (p. 589). On February 18, 1871, John Ella, at his 'La Società Lirica' music-making, gave a large selection from 'Lohengrin.' The nature of the performance may be judged by an account which appeared in the Orchestra of February, 1871. Here it is:

The first performance of the principal scenes of Wagner's 'Lohengrin' last Saturday [February 17, 1871], by the Società Lirica, afforded a great treat to a select circle of amateurs. M<sup>me</sup>. Preti and M<sup>lle</sup>. Annie [?], sustained the rôles of Elsa and Gertrude, with great effect, and the noble strain of the King in the first act, the Quintet, and Finale, sung by an accomplished amateur Baritone, Mr. Belcher, and a select choir, were most successful. The Marche Religieuse and Chorus, the Hymn, Nuptial March, and Bridal Chorus, and the exquisite duet of Elsa and Lohengrin, were greatly admired. M. Buziau led, Lord Gerald was Violoncello, and the small band, with Piano à 4 mains, was very effective. Mr. Ella intends to repeat the performance during the season. (Orchestra, February 24, 1871.)

At the third concert of the Wagner Society—St. James's Hall, May 9, 1873—Hans von Bülow conducted the Vorspiel and Finale (Act iii.) of 'Tristan,' most probably for the first time in England. As two additional concerts were given at the Wagner Festival in 1877—in the Royal Albert Hall, on May 28 and 29—the performances numbered eight, not six, as stated in the article. Wagner's three early overtures—'Polonia,' 'Christopher Columbus,' and 'Rule, Britannia'—obtained their first hearing in this country at the concert given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra (conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood), Queen's Hall, January 2, 1905. On p. 593, col. 2, ten lines from the bottom, of our September issue, 'sonata in E flat' should read 'Album sonata in A flat.'

The early journalistic references (in England) to Wagner can be added to by the following extracts relating to the production of 'Tannhäuser,' therein designated Tannenhäuser!:

ATHENÆUM—November 1 and 8, 1845.

There is promise at the Dresden Opera of a new musical drama by Wagner, called 'Der Tannenhäuser,' for which splendid scenery is being painted in Paris.

M. Wagner's opera of the 'Tannenhäuser,' mentioned last week, was given, it seems, at Dresden, on the 21st ultimo, with the most brilliant success. The composer was called for at the close of each act, and treated, on his arriving at home, with a torchlight procession and a serenade. To avoid falling into the misleading tone of the foreign journals on such occasions, let us remind the reader that the tests of a musical success are permanence and circulation.

The Musical World of September 11, 1845, forecasts the event thus (we give the extract literatim et verbatim):

DRESDEN.—The new opera, by Richard Wagner, Kapellmeister of the King of Saxony, and successor to Karl Maria Von Weber, is founded upon the popular German legend 'Der Venusberg.' It is in active preparation, and will be shortly produced in this city. The connoisseurs speak with enthusiasm of its merits, and rank it amongst the masterpieces of the day. The libretto—a work of great poetical merit—is also written by Wagner, as were the books of his first two operas, Rienzi and The Flying Dutchman. It will be seen that he possesses the rare union of two talents—poetry and music.

The performance of the opera does not appear to have been noticed in the above-named journal.

Johann Nikolaus Forkel (1749-1818) is best known as the first biographer of John Sebastian Bach, but in his day he achieved more or less fame as a composer. In a recent issue of the International Musical Society's Monthly Journal, Mr. Donald Francis Tovey has drawn attention to Forkel's twenty-four Variations on 'God save the King' composed in 1791. 'To anyone who knows Bach's "Goldberg Variations," these variations of Forkel,' says Mr. Tovey, 'are a source of pure and innocent joy.' He then goes on to prove his point in an interesting article on the said 'Veränderungen für Clavichord oder Fortepiano auf des Englische Volkslied, God save the King,' composed by Bach's biographer. Mr. Tovey does not mention the 'Kontrapunktische Bearbeitung des Englischen Volkslied, God save the King'—corrections by Abt Vogler of Forkel's twenty-four variations on the National Anthem—of which a copy is in the British Museum Library.

Covent Garden Theatre is to open its doors on January 14, 1907, to a month's season of German opera, under the management of M. Ernest van Dyck, with Herr Arthur Nikisch and Herr Michael Balling as conductors. In addition to such rarely heard operas (in England) as 'Der Freischütz,' 'Fidelio' and 'Die verkaufte Braut' (Smetana), performances will be given of Wagner's 'Der fliegende Holländer,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Die Walküre,' 'Tristan und Isolde' and 'Die Meistersinger.' Mr. Percy Pitt will be associated with Mr. Carl Ambruster in the direction of the chorus, and the London Symphony Orchestra is being negotiated with to perform at all the representations.

The Beethoven literature is to be enriched by two publications of the composer's letters—a critical edition, in four volumes, of 'Beethoven's Briefe und Tagebuchblätter' (edited by Dr. Fritz Prelinger, of Vienna), and, for the first time, a complete edition of the letters, of which Dr. A. C. Kalischer has undertaken the editorship.

Handel's imperfect knowledge of the English language is amusingly illustrated by the autograph score in the British Museum of his Chandos anthem (six parts) 'As pants the hart,' wherein, with his usual mighty pen-strokes, he writes, 'As paints the hart.' That this was not a slip of the pen is shown by his having written 'paints' throughout the movement—thirteen times in all!

Mr. Henry J. Wood has been appointed conductor of the Norwich Musical Festival in succession to Mr. Randegger, who has discharged the duties of that office with conspicuous success for twenty-four years. The next Festival is due to be held in 1908. Sir Charles Stanford has been unanimously re-elected conductor of the Leeds Musical Festival, the next meeting of which will take place in 1907.

The German music publishing trade issued during the year 1905 no fewer than 12,797 works. Instrumental music is represented by 6,889, vocal compositions by 5,437 and musical literature by 471 books, &c. The percentage of those publications which paid even the cost of production would be even more interesting than the foregoing figures.

The manuscript of Beethoven's 'Waldstein' sonata, consisting of thirty-two oblong folio pages, is at present in the possession of the Leipzig antiquarian Karl W. Hieremann, and may be purchased for the sum of 44,000 marks—only £2,200!

An enterprising firm of house furnishers at Hereford improved the occasion of the recent festival by inserting the following ingenious advertisement in the Hereford newspapers :

MEMS. FOR MUSICIANS

ATTENDING THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Our Rustless Kettles Sing a good song.
Our Pocket Knives and Razors are the Best made.
Our Floor Coverings will please whether for Mansion, Villa, or ?
Our Paperhangings will Harmonize beautifully.
Our Family Scales are A Minor but useful appliance.
Our Plate Powder is Goddard's own Composition.
Our Garden Forks are almost Tuning Forks.
Our Mincing Machines are unequalled for Chopin.
Our Stable Brooms are of the finest Bass, and can be had with or without a Handel.
Our Floor Polish is a fine Stainer.
Our Blind, Picture, and Sash Chords are 2/<sub>4</sub> lines which householders should note.
Our Feather Beds will rest the weary body and shake up anew next morning.
Our Ladders, like Exercises, lead you safely step by step.
Our Dinner Gongs are a fine Creation, and make a din, but not by Haydn.
Our Staff have no Crotchets, their technique is excellent, and Performance is in good time.

Even the birds of Hereford were attracted to the musical festival. A local journal records the fact thus :

Sunday afternoon will not soon be forgotten. There was the usual eager crow waiting for admission, and the usual air of expectancy on entering.

Unless that eager crow mistook crotchets and quavers for field mice and small birds, one can only assume that the musical atmosphere of the place is so highly charged as to affect the feathered world. 'The usual air of expectancy' is a little more difficult to account for, but doubtless it is ornithological-logical.

Much interest was aroused at Hereford by some specimens of that rare animal the Zigmollicon. They were kept in confinement by an eminent brewer residing near the cathedral, and passers by who managed to catch a glimpse of the elusive little creatures greatly admired their subtly-tinted coats. It was reported that they had been recently imported by Herr Johann von Ueberrock, the well known zoological specialist.

In these days of overcrowding in the musical profession, no apology is needed for reproducing the following recently issued advertisement :

To Violinists.

Male attendant wanted at Darenth Asylum, Dartford, Kent (under the Metropolitan Asylums Board). One who can play first violin preferred.

Salary £26, rising to £32, with board, lodging, washing, and uniform, and the following allowances :

- (1) £3 per annum, in lieu of beer, if desired.
- (2) £2 per annum, subject to good conduct.
- (3) 6d. for each musical practice and performance.

Apply to the Medical Superintendent, either personally (10 to 1), with testimonials, or by letter, with copies of testimonials.

The extra '6d. for each musical practice and performance' should be an inducement; and, who knows, perhaps some addition might be made to the £2 per annum, subject to good conduct' if the successful candidate is also a good conductor.

Lady music-teachers may be interested to know the form in which advertisements appeared in the long ago. The following is from the Public Advertiser of May 5, 1791 :

MUSIC TAUGHT.

A Female, sufficiently qualified, would wish to instruct Ladies at home or abroad on the Harpsichord or Piano Forte, at the moderate terms of Half-a-Guinea entrance, and One Guinea Twelve Lessons.

Please apply at No. 439, Oxford-street.

SIZE IN ORGANS.

Size in organs is not for the non-musical to judge; enough, perhaps, that their ears should be made to ache. But a step now being taken in Germany should serve as an object-lesson to experts. Prince Donnesmarck has just placed in one of the new Berlin churches an organ of dimensions so large as to entitle the instrument to be deemed one of the largest in the world. It has cost about £5,000. The 'blowing' is done by an electric motor of ten horse-power, which is embedded in a thick wall and isolated by iron doors so that the noise of its working shall not be heard. There are four claviers and six thousand stops, of which the most noteworthy are the 'angelic chorus,' the 'heavenly voice,' 'murmuring breakers,' 'sea waves,' and the 'human voice.' (Globe, September 7, 1906.)

'Size in organs'! 6,000 stops!! And only £5,000! In the manipulation of those noteworthy stops even Dr. Peace, or Mr. Hollins, might put his foot into it, toe and heel, if not in toto.

THE KINGDOM.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S NEW ORATORIO.

The task which Sir Edward Elgar has set himself was partly accomplished at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1903. This time-honoured and far-famed music-making—at which exactly sixty years ago 'Elijah' was launched on the sea of success—has again come round in its triennial orbit, bringing with it a corollary of Sir Edward Elgar's earlier work and furnishing a further instalment of his series of oratorios. As in 'The Apostles' the composer has, with one exception, selected the text of his oratorio from the Bible, and in so doing he has drawn from those inexhaustible riches which have inspired the best thoughts of the great masters of music. The exception is the use he has made of the 'Didachè, or 'Teaching of the twelve Apostles.' This is one of the oldest manuals of Christian teaching, dating perhaps from the 1st century, but of unknown authorship. It was re-discovered in 1873 in a manuscript found at the library of the Monastery of the Holy Sepulchre at Constantinople.

In selecting the title of his new work Sir Edward realized that 'The Kingdom' is no circumscribed environment, but that it embraces and touches all men. In his choice of texts he has given further proof of his theological knowledge and of his constructive insight. Let us then take a brief survey of an oratorio which illustrates a great theme through the divine art of music.

The first scene is unfolded at Jerusalem. An orchestral prelude forges the links, in the Gospel and Apostles motives, which connect the former with the present oratorio. Soon, however, the outstanding prominence of Peter in the new work is made manifest by the six-fold repetition of the short but characteristic motive associated with his name; indeed, this prelude may be taken to suggest a soul-picture of Peter as he reflects on his denial of Christ. Motives representing Christ's loneliness' and the 'New faith' are welding forces in the gateway, so to speak, leading to 'The Kingdom.'

The spirit of peace and concord breathes its soul-refreshing dew upon the scene 'In the Upper Room.' What could be more appropriate than that the orchestra should be hushed in silence, and give place to the most perfect of all instruments, the human voice? Soloists (Mary, Mary Magdalene, John, and Peter) unite with the chorus in uttering the injunction 'Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.' Here then is the keynote of the oratorio, set forth in a simple choral strain. The music in this section is characterized by a quasi-conversational style suggestive of the gathering of the small Messianic community met together for 'the breaking of bread'; here the music is not, however, without its jubilant note—e.g., the fughetta outburst 'O praise the Name of the Lord.' After an unconventional Amen, Peter rises to address his brethren, and the music proceeds in free declamatory style. A long choral movement, rich in thematic material, full of dynamic contrast—tones strenuous and tender—stamps this scene with the composer's fertility of resource, choral and orchestral.

Idyllic is the adjective that can be applied to the short section (II.) headed 'At the Beautiful Gate (The Morn of Pentecost)'. Joy mingled with pity is reflected in the music, and a note of true pathos is sounded in the accompaniment to the words 'This man, lame,' a phrase touchingly piteous in its tenderness. The next scene (III.) is entitled 'Pentecost (in the Upper Room)'. Here the composer has found full scope for his imagination in this fully developed portion of his oratorio. In some respects the most remarkable section of the work, the descriptive possibilities of the descent of the Holy Ghost and especially 'the tongues parting asunder, like as of fire,' are portrayed in some very remarkable music. Not only is the section almost entirely choral, but the orchestration is unusually rich in the variety of its colouration. Towards the end, climax succeeds climax until the concluding words, 'Whom God hath glorified,' are proclaimed in a pæan of praise.

There could be no greater contrast to the music just described than that which permeates the next scene (IV.), called 'The Sign of Healing (at the Beautiful Gate)'. Tranquil strains greet the ear with all the suggestiveness of inward peace and spiritual happiness. Moreover, the soliloquy of Mary (soprano voice) forms a prominent feature in this scene. Preceded by a short and impressive instrumental introduction, it is one of the longest if not the most fully developed vocal movements Sir Edward Elgar has composed. Night is portrayed in a strain that in its hushed melody recalls Southey's words:

How beautiful is night!

A dewy freshness fills the silent air;

No mist obscures, nor cloud, nor speck, nor stain

Breaks the serene of heaven.

'The voice of joy is in the dwelling of the righteous' is fearlessly asserted in choral song, at the beginning of scene V.—'The Upper Room (in fellowship)'. There exists no longer any hesitancy on the part of 'the disciples and holy women' in proclaiming the truth that is in them, and no less strenuous is the statement 'Lord, Thou didst make the heaven, and the earth, and the sea,' poured forth in a strain of mighty unison, accompanied by a weighty octave figure in the orchestral bass, including trombones and tubas. To this succeeds 'The Breaking of Bread,' naturally the most solemn part of the oratorio—in which the words (sung by solo voices) 'Thou, Almighty Lord, hast given food and drink to mankind,' are impressively accompanied by the chorus singing in three octaves and whispering the words 'Wondrously with us,' the orchestra remaining silent. John, to whom, after Peter, is assigned the most important part in the oratorio, says: 'Give thanks, first for the Cup,' which is followed by the response, 'We thank Thee, our Father, for the holy Vine,' sung by the chorus in softest unison. Here again the choral element furnishes a deep tint to the glowing picture, soon however, to intensify its radiance in the music set to the words, 'May Thy church be gathered together from the bounds of the earth.'

What could be more fitting than that the oratorio should conclude with the Lord's Prayer? As might be expected, the treatment is quite unconventional. Beginning in unison the setting is choral throughout, and, excepting the words 'for ever and ever,' there are no repetitions. At the words 'for ever and ever' there is a fine sequence when the voices sing in thirds and in contrary motion, while the orchestra, with great brilliancy and sonority, joins in emphasizing the eternal truths of the statement, the whole forming a jubilant and triumphant climax which is as original as it is impressive. After John has said 'Ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father,' the chorus confirm the statement with 'Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, and we are Thine.' A fragment of the New Faith symbol and the chord of E flat for the full orchestra conclude a work of which only the fringe of its subject-matter has been touched upon in the above forecast—one which, it may be assumed, will add to the fame of its composer and enrich the art of music.

Church and Organ Music.

'AURELIA.'

Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley's hymn-tune, 'Aurelia' has found a place in all—or nearly all—hymnals, irrespective of denomination, during the last forty years. As a favourite strain it is sung in the service of song in countless churches and chapels wherever the English language is used. What of its history?

Dr. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral, and an articulated pupil of Wesley's, has kindly sent us his recollections of 'Aurelia' specially for this article. Dr. Pyne writes: 'I was in the Close at Winchester, sitting in the drawing-room with Mrs. Wesley and Mrs. Stewart, mother of General Sir Herbert Stewart, when he (S. S. W.) came up, and said: "I think I have written a tune for 'The voice that breathed o'er Eden' which will be popular." He played it over many times, and we all agreed with him.'

This was in 1864, when Wesley was organist of Winchester Cathedral. At that time he lived in one of four houses built by Charles II. for several of his suite when the Merry Monarch honoured the cathedral city with his presence. The house was in that part of the Close called 'Dumb Alley,' so named because in former times it was inhabited by four canons, not one of whom could preach. Wesley's house was a venerable structure having a grand staircase and an old-world environment. It was subsequently occupied by the late Dr. Arnold, who succeeded Wesley in the organistship, and the present writer visited the house as Dr. Arnold's guest, spending a pleasant hour or two in the curious-shaped room, oak-panelled from floor to ceiling, looking out upon the well-kept lawn of the high-walled garden and the pear trees planted by Wesley. In this cosy sanctum Wesley wrote 'Aurelia.'

The tune first appeared in a book entitled :

A SELECTION OF PSALMS AND HYMNS,
ARRANGED FOR THE PUBLIC SERVICES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND,
BY THE
REV. CHARLES KEMBLE, M.A.,
RECTOR OF BATH.
THE MUSIC
WHICH, IN ADDITION TO STANDARD TUNES, INCLUDES MANY ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS, IS TAKEN FROM
"THE EUROPEAN PSALMIST"
SELECTED, ARRANGED, AND PARTLY COMPOSED BY SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.
LONDON:
JOHN F. SHAW & CO., 48, PATERNOSTER ROW.
1864.

The Rev. Charles Kemble was for fifteen years rector of Bath, where he died in 1874. He issued the first edition of his hymnal (words only) in 1853. When a music edition seemed desirable, he would naturally seek the aid of Wesley in its preparation, as, apart from his great reputation as a musician, Mr. Kemble must have come into personal contact with the organist of Winchester Cathedral during his visits to Bath as the friend of James Kendrick Pyne, senr., organist of Bath Abbey for half a century. Wesley not only undertook the task of compiling the desired tune-book, but regarded it as a duty not to be lightly discharged. Moreover, he had pronounced views on the subject which are as well expressed as they are valuable in the present day. But Wesley may speak for himself in his Preface to a book which has become important in the history of English psalmody. He says :

In undertaking to provide the Music of this Volume of Psalms and Hymns, I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to confine the Selection to such standard Tunes as were qualified by long usage, and simplicity, for Congregational Singing ; Tunes which could be best sung and most easily remembered ; and similar motives have guided me in respect to the Harmonization.

From the frequent occurrence of unusual metres, much new composition seemed necessary, unless I accepted the alternative of inserting Tunes apparently quite devoid of merit. The task of composing new music for Congregational use, is an onerous one. Many efforts of the kind have proved unsuccessful ; should such be the result, in the present case, it will, at least, not have proceeded from any earnest lack of desire to do full justice to so interesting and grave a subject.

It may perhaps be allowed that many of our new Hymns are hardly adapted for those majestic progressions of melody which characterize the best German and English Chorales. Such lines as "Brightest and best of the sons of the morning," and "Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee," seem to require other treatment.

In a few cases, where the Harmonization might have been difficult to Singers, a second reading of such passages has been given ; but in the far larger compilation of Tunes, and other pieces of Church Music, whence the present Selection is derived, i.e., "The European Psalmist" many tunes appear, containing Harmonies by SEBASTIAN BACH and others, which are eminently conducive to the progress of true taste and knowledge, and which may, it is hoped, create fresh interest in the music of Divine Worship ; and music of such a character seems to be required ; for, in various instances at the present time, a course absolutely retrograde is adopted, and specimens, long laid aside and destitute of melody, and wanting even in the improvements of modern notation, have been revived, and intruded on our Choirs.

The whole subject of Church Music might derive great profit were some such attentive investigation bestowed upon it, as has of late been instituted in almost every other department of the Public Service.

S. S. WESLEY.

Winchester,

September, 1864.

'Kemble's Psalms and Hymns, with music by S. Sebastian Wesley. 4/-'—to quote the title on the cover—is a book 8½ by 6 inches, the words of the hymns being printed in double columns. After the fashion of hymnals issued in Scotland, it is a cut-book—that is to say its leaves are cut through under the music portion (about 3 or 4 inches deep and printed at the top of the page as usual), so that words and music can be turned over independently of each other according to the mating of hymn and tune required ; therefore it is the antithesis of a fixed-tune book. The hymns number 624, exclusive of thirteen doxologies, and each hymn is superscribed with the name and the number of the tune to which it should be sung.

The tunes number exactly 150. To these succeed two settings of the Sanctus, two 'Responses' (Kyries), two Glorias, fourteen double chants, and sixteen single chants, the music portion concluding with a few pages of music paper for the addition of manuscript tunes. Of the 150 tunes, thirty-three are certainly by Wesley, the great majority of which are dated 1863 and 1864. There are in addition thirteen anonymous tunes, some of which may also have been composed by Wesley. 'Aurelia' (No. 122) is not assigned to 'The voice that breathed o'er Eden,' but to Dr. Neale's translation of portions of the great poem—3,000 lines in dactylic hexameters—written by Bernard of Morlaix or Cluny of the 12th century. 'Brief life is here our portion,' 'For thee, O dear, dear country' and 'Jerusalem the golden' are familiar to all congregations, and it is to these sections of the poem that Wesley finally assigned his well-known tune, hence its name 'Aurelia.' The tune obtained a wider publicity than that afforded by Mr. Kemble's book when it was included in the Appendix of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' where, by-the-way, it was not very happily mated to the hymn beginning :

In days of old on Sinai,
The Lord Almighty came.

In the subsequent editions of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' 'Aurelia' is associated with the late Rev. S. J. Stone's hymn 'The Church's one foundation' : in some hymnals with 'O day of rest and gladness,' but curiously enough its original assignation has not been followed.

A very wide publicity was given to 'Aurelia' when it was sung at the Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of the Prince of Wales (King Edward VII.) at St. Paul's Cathedral, on February 27, 1872. In connection with that national event Dr. Gauntlett issued a circular protesting against the inclusion of 'Aurelia' in the service. We have not been able to see a copy of that circular (perhaps some of our readers can supply one), but that it did exist the columns of the Musical Standard and Choir fully testify. The worthy doctor regarded 'Aurelia' as 'poor,' 'secular twaddle,' made up from 'Auld Robin Gray,' and so on. The conclusion of the circular is thus given in the Choir:

As a Church Musician, and for the defence of our national reputation for Church music, I beg to protest against the secular twaddle of this tune 'Aurelia,' as being inartistic and not fulfilling the conditions of a hymn tune, and as a Choral for this occasion unfitted to the Church, and to the National worship of the day. It is difficult to suggest a reason why so poor a tune as 'Aurelia' should have been selected, and Melchior Teschner's splendid Choral

All glory, laud, and honour

(No. 86) in the same hymn book—should have been overlooked, or rather set aside.

This opinion by no means weakened the position of 'Aurelia,' which has been sung, and will continue to be sung, by millions of worshippers.

There are other features of interest in this cut-book of nearly half a century ago to which reference may be made on some future occasion. In the meantime we reprint from it a charming children's tune named 'Eden,' and set to 'There is a happy land.' Wesley composed this tune at the house of Mr. Kendrick Pyne, at Bath, for his (Wesley's) godson Ernest Wesley Pyne (brother of Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne). A chorister at Magdalen College, Oxford, and the possessor of a singularly beautiful voice, Ernest Pyne became an organist in America, and died there about ten years ago. Here is the tune, delightful alike in its melodic simplicity and harmony:

EDEN. S. S. WESLEY.

There is a hap-py land, Far, far a-way,

Where saints in glo-ry stand, Bright, bright as day.

Oh! how they sweetly sing, Worthy is our Saviour King,

Loud let His prais-es ring, Praise, praise for aye.

MR. A. R. REINAGLE AND HIS SALARY.

Mr. J. F. R. Stainer kindly sends us a copy of a circular issued by the composer of 'St. Peter' in regard to his salary as organist. The document is so far wasp-like, in that its sting is in the tail:

To the rate payers of the parish of St. Peter-in-the-East, Oxford.

Gentlemen,

I regret to find that it is the wish of some of the rate payers to reduce my salary from £20 to £15 per annum, the reason assigned being that the sum of £5 was added to the original stipend in consideration of my teaching the boys to sing psalms in the church. I think that some misunderstanding exists on this point, which I will endeavour to clear away. When I was appointed organist, I understood that part of my duty was to practise the singing boys, which I did every week. When chanting and additional music were introduced into the service, my salary was raised to £20, and Mr. Hamilton (then your vicar) told me that some ladies wished to teach the children to sing, but that I was still required to attend once during the week to play to the singers, and this attendance, with few exceptions (illness or very urgent business preventing), I have given up to the present time.

On enquiry I find that no organist in Oxford is paid less than £20 per annum, and a few receive more for performing the same duty that I do.

If you think that I am overpaid, and that £5 will be an important saving to the parish, I shall submit to the reduction.

I am, yours obediently,

A. R. REINAGLE,

21, Holywell, Organist of St. Peter-in-the-East.
April 16, 1850.

Mr. W. G. Whittaker, organist of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, South Shields, has drawn up an interesting and comprehensive scheme of nine organ recitals which he proposes to give during the winter. 'Each recital will usually be given on two Sunday evenings in succession,' the prospectus states, and a commendable paragraph reads:

The constant appearance of the name of Bach on the programmes of these recitals is due to an earnest desire to spread an appreciation of his works. Only prolonged acquaintance with, and intimate knowledge of, the glorious creations of the master can cause their true value and supreme beauty to be recognized; it is therefore hoped that past and present non-appreciation of their greatness will not deter members of the congregation from taking every opportunity of listening to them.

Dr. A. L. Peace re-opened the Gilfillan Memorial Organ, Dundee, on September 12, when he gave two interesting recitals. On the following evening Haydn's oratorio 'The Creation' was performed under the direction of Mr. S. C. Hirst, with Dr. Peace at the organ.

Mr. William H. Stocks has resigned his position as organist of Dulwich College, an appointment he has held for the past twenty years. He has accepted the post of private organist to Sir Neil Menzies of Menzies, Bart., at Castle Menzies, Perthshire.

The following works will be performed at the seventh series of Oratorio Services held at Brixton Church and conducted by Mr. Douglas Redman—St. Paul, Creation, Light of Life, As the hart pants (Mendelssohn), Stabat Mater (Rossini), Redemption, and Messiah.

'First steps: a manual of instructions for probationary choristers, junior and senior,' by R. W. Brown (Wigan: Thomas Wall & Sons, Ltd.), is a sixpenny pamphlet which contains some useful hints on the subject of which it treats.

In the account of the organ in Melbourne Town Hall which appeared in our September issue (p. 618) the name of the firm who rebuilt the instrument should have been stated as Messrs. Ingram & Company, Hereford.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Dr. A. L. Peace, St. Luke's, Liverpool (opening of new memorial organ built by Messrs. W. Rushworth & Sons)—Finale from organ concerto in D, Samuel Wesley.

Mr. C. H. Moody, Astley Bridge Church, Bolton—Pastorale, Callaerts.

Mr. S. J. Janes, Parish Church, Okehampton—Toccata in F minor, Driffil.

Mr. E. J. Trusler, Parish Church, Littlehampton—Fantasia and fugue (Op. 76), Hesse.

Dr. Eaglefield Hull, St. Aidan's, Huddersfield (opening of new organ, built by Messrs. Hill & Son)—Second sonata, Peace.

Mr. Bryan E. Warhurst, St. Paul's, Colwyn Bay—Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant.

Mr. Alfred J. Dye, Parish Church, Wickham Market—Air varied in F sharp minor, S. S. Wesley.

Mr. F. C. Barry, St. Luke's, Oamaru, New Zealand—Overture in E, Morandi.

Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. Bees, Whitehaven—Fugue on a trumpet fanfare, Best.

Mr. F. R. Frye, Parish Church, High Easter—(Opening of new organ built by Messrs. Bedwell & Sons, Cambridge)—Grand Chœur in G, Faulkes.

Dr. G. H. Smith, Parish Church, Sculcoates—Organ concerto in F, Handel.

Dr. W. Prendergast, St. Mark's, Jersey—Voluntary in G, Stanley.

Mr. H. Matthias Turton, St. Agnes', Leeds—Andante and finale (from Sonata in G minor), Carl Piutti.

ORGANIST, CHOIRMASTER AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Harold W. Clare, St. Paul's Church, Concord, New Hampshire.

Mr. R. E. Parker, St. Saviour's Church, Oxtou, Birkenhead.

Mr. Charles Preston, Wesleyan Methodist Church, Basingstoke.

Mr. Arthur E. Sims, Great Central Hall, Newport, Mon.

Mr. Rawdon Spinney, St. Chad's Church, Stafford.

Mr. R. R. Morris, King's College, Cambridge.

BERLIOZ'S TE DEUM.

It is interesting at the outset to note that the Eroica symphony of Beethoven and the Te Deum of Berlioz bear a two-fold affinity to each other: both are typical creations of their respective composers, and both owe their conception to the first Napoleon. Moreover, they served quite a different purpose from that which originally brought them into existence. Always an artist of the wildest imagination and extravagant ideas, Berlioz conceived the thought of glorifying the military renown of Napoleon I. by the composition of a grand work in which the epic and dramatic should be interwoven, entitled 'The return of the First Consul from his Italian campaign.' This was in 1849, when the composer had attained his forty-sixth year. Naturally the work was to be on the largest scale possible—Berlioz always painted on a huge canvas—in order that it should worthily apotheosise the over-ambitious General. Dr. Richard Pohl says,* however, that in this prodigious dramatic conception the Te Deum was only an episode! The idea was this: at that moment in the work when General Bonaparte was supposed to enter Notre Dame the 'Ambrosian Hymn of Praise' should burst forth in all its splendour, and that at its close the standards of the victorious army should be taken up to the altar, there to be blessed, amid the beating of drums, the firing of salvos of artillery, and the performance of martial music. Except the Te Deum, however, no other portion of this extraordinary Bonapartian conception came to fruition.

Six years, at least, was the work in process of composition. On February 23, 1849, Berlioz writes to General Lwoff (or Lvov)—composer of the Russian National Hymn—saying:

I am now hard at work upon a grand Te Deum for double chorus, with orchestra and organ obbligato.

In December, 1852, the assumption of the throne of France by Napoleon III. raised the hopes of Berlioz that his Napoleonic work—or rather a part of the original design—might be performed in connection with the coronation. Accordingly he wrote to his friend Auguste Morel on December 19, 1852:

The Te Deum is in the air: it is spoken of, but the Emperor will not say a word. He is postponing his decision for three or four months.

As might be expected, those 'three or four months' came and went without 'the air' giving place to actual performance. As a matter of fact the Te Deum failed to secure its birthright; it made its entry into the world under private auspices and not in glorification of Napoleon.

An interesting and amusing letter written by Berlioz to Liszt may be quoted from. It is dated 'Paris, July 2, 1854':

To-morrow I have to attend a meeting in connection with the performance of the Te Deum in the church of Saint-Eustache to take place next year on the eve of the opening of the Exhibition. Several friends have joined together to defray the expenses connected with it. One gives 3,000 francs, another 2,000, and they are seeing about getting the rest of the money. The matter was started by Ducroquet, builder of the new organ at Saint-Eustache. What a pity you won't play on it during and after the Te Deum: it would have suited us to a 'T.' As Ducroquet naturally wishes to show off his instrument, the part for which plays too modest a rôle in my score—the idea has occurred to me to have an organ solo played after the Te Deum by the organist engaged, either Hesse or Lemmens, or that charming little organist with his rings, cameo, and gold-headed cane, who livens up the melodies he plays and who is named Lefébure-Wély.

We are also counting on the support of the Empress, because she is patroness of an institution for children, seven or eight hundred of whom will be employed by me pour le choral du Te Deum. The above friends reckon upon receipts at the church amounting to 15,000 francs. I am trying to calm this sanguine estimate—I know Paris too well!

A few days later Berlioz wrote, also to Liszt:

The Te Deum business is now definitely settled. We shall have, I hope, a careful and grandiose performance, and 600 or 700 children for the third choir—the choral theme. (July 28, 1854.)

On March 2, 1855, Berlioz writes to M. Tajan-Rogé: 'I have to organize the first performance of my Te Deum at [the church of] Saint-Eustache for the 1st of May, and to leave for London, where I am engaged by the New Philharmonic Society.' To Morel—on April 14—he writes:

I am hard at work now on the Te Deum, and your absence at such a time seems very strange to me. I hope, nevertheless, that all will go well. Will you be kind enough to have the enclosed announcement inserted in the Marseilles papers? The huge church must be full or we are ruined. The affair will cost 7,000 francs.

On April 27, two days before the production of the Te Deum, Berlioz writes to his son Louis:

I was very ill the day before yesterday, and I thought I should not have strength enough to get through my rehearsals. To-day I am somewhat better. Yesterday we had our first rehearsal [of the Te Deum] at Saint-Eustache with the orchestra and 600 children. It is beginning to progress. It is colossal! There is a finale which, I verily believe, is grander than the Tuba mirum of my Requiem. What a pity you cannot hear it. Good-bye: be sensible, and do not waste the little money you have.

The first performance of the Te Deum took place in the church of Saint-Eustache, Paris, on April 30, 1855. The date was doubtless chosen as being the eve of the opening of the Great Exhibition in the French capital, but this event was postponed from May 1 to May 15, probably on account of the attempted assassination of the Emperor (Napoleon III.), on April 28, two days before the production of the Te Deum. In a very interesting letter to Liszt, written immediately after the performance—on the same day in fact, April 30, 1855—Berlioz says:

I write only a line or two to tell you that the Te Deum was performed to-day with the utmost precision. It was colossal—Babylonian, Ninevetic. Not an empty seat in the splendid church. The children sang as if they were one single artist, and the artists . . . as I hoped, and as I had a right to expect from them, for I was most exacting in my selection. There was not a fault, not a moment's hesitation. I had a young fellow from Brussels, who beat time for the organist in his gallery, and kept him all right in spite of the distance.

Good heavens, if only you had been there! I assure you it is a formidable work; the Judex outdoes all the enormities of which I have been previously guilty. I first write to you, worried as I am, because I feel sure that there is not a man in all Europe who is as interested in this event as you are. Yes, the Requiem has a brother, a brother born with teeth, like Richard the Third (minus the hump); and you may take my word for it that to-day it went to the very heart of the audience. And what a huge audience! There were 950 performers. And not a single fault! I can't get over my astonishment.

To Morel he wrote—on June 2, 1855:

You ask me to tell you about the Te Deum—rather a difficult thing for me to do. I will merely say that the effect produced upon me by the work was prodigious, and my feeling is shared by the performers. Speaking generally, the measured grandeur of the conception and style made an immense impression upon them, and you may rest assured that Tibi omnes and the Judex, in two entirely different styles, are movements worthy of Babylon or Nineveh, and they will be more imposing still when they are heard in a smaller and less resonant building than the church of Saint-Eustache.

In 1862 Berlioz presented the autograph full-score of his Te Deum to the Imperial Public Library at St. Petersburg, accompanying the gift with the following letter, dated 'Paris, September 10, 1862,' addressed to M. Vladimir Stasov, the veteran and distinguished writer on Russian music, at that time assistant to the Director of the Imperial Public Library at St. Petersburg:

I have been fortunate in finding one of my manuscripts in such good condition that I am happy to be able to offer it to the public library of St. Petersburg. It is the manuscript of the Te Deum which you spoke to me about. If you will do me the favour of paying me a second visit to-morrow, Thursday, at 12 o'clock, I will show it to you.

When I wrote the above, I had faith and hope; to-day the only virtue remaining in me is resignation. I none the less feel, however, a lasting gratitude for the sympathy shown to me by all true friends of art, such as yourself.

This manuscript score at St. Petersburg contains a Prelude to the fourth movement in the work ('Dignare, Domine, die isto') which does not appear in the original edition. The Prelude is of a military character (the score includes six side-drums) and contains a note by Berlioz to the effect that it is only to be performed at a service in celebration of a victory, or on occasions that are strictly military.

In his autobiography Berlioz includes the Te Deum among his 'architectural' works—the others being the 'Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale,' for two orchestras and chorus, and the cantata ('L'Imperiale') for two choirs. He further states that 'the Judex crederis [in the Te Deum] is without doubt my greatest creation.' The architectonic nature of the work may be gathered from a further quotation from the composer's autobiography. He says: 'In the Te Deum, the organ at one end of the church answers the orchestra and two choirs at the other, whilst a third large choir represents a concourse of people, taking part, as it were, from time to time, in a vast sacred concert.'

The demands which the De Deum makes on executive resources may be estimated from the requirements of the composer, as stated by him in the original edition of the full-score:

STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.

1st violins	-	-	-	-	-	25
2nd violins	-	-	-	-	-	24
Violas	-	-	-	-	-	18
Violoncellos	-	-	-	-	-	18
Double-basses	-	-	-	-	-	16

Total strings - - - - - 101

In addition to the above the score necessitates the employment of the following instruments:

4 Flutes	2 Cornets
4 Oboes	6 Trombones
1 Cor Anglais	Ophicleide
4 Clarinets	Tuba
1 Bass clarinet	Drums
4 Bassoons	Big drum
4 Horns	4 Side-drums
2 Trumpets	4 or 5 pairs of cymbals

Organ

And in regard to the chorus, the full-score gives the following requirements:

FIRST CHOIR.	SECOND CHOIR.	THIRD CHOIR.
Sopranos - 40	Sopranos - 40	Children's voices
Tenors - 30	Tenors - 30	(singing in unison) 600
Basses - 30	Basses - 30

Berlioz, always most punctilious as to details, gives definite directions in regard to performance. He says, in effect:

The orchestra and choirs must be placed at the extreme end of the church, and away from and opposite the great organ. Should the organist not be in electric communication with the conductor, he (the organist) is to have someone to beat time to him, exactly imitating the beats of the conductor, or else, 'the organist would be sure to drag.'

The choir of children is to be as numerous as possible and separated from the two main choirs. These juvenile songsters are to be placed on a raised platform in close proximity to the orchestra. Two or three conductors are necessary to lead the children and to pass on, as it were, the conductor-in-chief's beat. If absolutely necessary the choir of children may be dispensed with, but its co-operation greatly enhances the general effect.

Considering the very important part Berlioz assigns in the work to the organ, it is strange that he should say, 'If there is no organ in the concert-room, or theatre, in which the work is performed, a harmonium must supply the place of the organ'!

The original title of the full-score of the work reads :

A son Altesse Royale Monseigneur le Prince Albert

TE DEUM

avec Orchestre et Orgue concertants par
HECTOR BERLIOZ
œuvre 22

Exécuté pour la première fois, sous la direction de l'Auteur, par 900 musiciens, dans l'Eglise de Saint-Eustache, à Paris, le 30 Avril 1855.

Chez G. Brandus, Dufour et Cie, Éditeurs, rue de Richelieu, 103. A Saint-Petersbourg, Maison Brandus ;—A Londres, Chez Cramer et Beale ;—A Leipzig, Chez Kistner.

1855.

The dedication of the work to the Prince Consort was doubtless prompted by the practical interest the Prince took in the Great Exhibition of 1851. The subscribers to the work on its publication included Queen Victoria, the King of the Belgians, the Kings of Hanover, Saxony and Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia.

In an interesting letter to Wagner, written about four months after the production of the Te Deum, Berlioz says :

I should be very pleased to send you the scores you have been good enough to ask me for ; unfortunately, I have not had any of them from my publishers for a long time. But there are two or three—the Te Deum, 'L'Enfance du Christ,' and 'Lelio' (lyric monodrame), which will appear in a few weeks, and in any case I can send you those.

I have your 'Lohengrin' ; if you could let me have 'Tannhäuser,' you would confer a pleasure on me. The meeting you propose would be a fête, but I must not allow myself to think of it. I am compelled to make journeys which are anything but pleasure trips in order to gain a livelihood, as Paris gives me nothing but Dead Sea fruit.

No complete performance of the Te Deum other than that recorded above took place during the lifetime of the composer, nor, indeed, until twenty-eight years after its production, when it was given in the cathedral at Bordeaux in November (or December) 1883 : this revival led to its being performed in the following year at Weimar, on May 24, 1884 (under Müller-Hartung), and at Vienna in December, 1884 (under Dr. Richter).

The first performance of the work in England took place at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of April 18, 1885, conducted by Sir August Manns. The Bach Choir were the first to present it to a London audience at St. James's Hall, on May 17, 1887, and the same organization performed it at Westminster Abbey, on June 28, 1888, to celebrate the Jubilee of the Coronation of Queen Victoria, both performances being conducted by Sir Charles Stanford. On October 2, 1894, under Dr. Richter's direction, the work formed part of the programme of the Birmingham musical festival of that year. Its first performance at a Three Choirs festival was in Hereford Cathedral, on September 13, 1906, under the conductorship of Dr. G. R. Sinclair, who had prepared a new edition of this remarkable conception of the brain of Hector Berlioz.

Reviews.

Ueber Heimat und Ursprung der mehrstimmigen Tonkunst.
Von Dr. Victor Lederer. Band I.

[Leipzig : C. F. W. Siegel.]

In his preface to this valuable book the author states very clearly the main points of his lengthy argument : Music of the 15th century is the key for understanding that of the Middle Ages ; Dunstable was the pioneer of the new art of the early part of that century ; and finally, Wales was the home, or rather the cradle of polyphony. Music of the 15th century was so far the key of the Middle Ages in that a great change took place in the art, but of course there were previous changes, so that the understanding afforded by the one century would not be complete. As to Dunstable, the record of Tintoris is a strong one, for he declares him to have been 'novae artis fons et origo apud Anglicos.' But for the error with respect to Dufay—which at length was rectified through the researches of M. Houdoy and Dr. Haberl—the testimony of Tintoris and other writers would surely not have been doubted. The third point, re Wales, is touched upon in the volume under notice, but it will be discussed more fully in a second volume. It is strange, and disappointing, that practically nothing should be known about Dunstable except the fact that he was buried in London in the year 1453. In 'Dufay and his contemporaries' the authors, Sir John and Miss Cecie Stainer, 'at first thought his identity might be concealed under the name of Johannes le Grant' but found that suggestion untenable. Dr. Lederer has another view. Dunstable and Lyonel Power, he says, are closely related, for the same compositions are ascribed in some manuscripts to Dunstable, in others to Lyonel ; moreover he finds a great similarity of style in their music. Then again in England only one composition bears the name of Dunstable, but many that of Lyonel. The third chapter is entitled 'The dawn of the reformation in music,' and that title was borrowed from Elmham's 'Memorials of Henry V.,' in which that author speaks of the 'dilectum glorie psalterii et citharae' during the early years of that king's reign. Many passages are quoted from Elmham and Capgrave (Liber de illustribus Henricis) to show how fond Henry V. was of music, how he himself was a composer, and what attention he paid to the service of song in the church. There seems no reason to doubt these facts, but pretty much the same could be said of some of the early French kings. Moreover by his translations (in German) from the Latin, Dr. Lederer is inclined at times to give exaggerated meaning to the words. For instance, in an anonymous poem occurs the line which he takes to mean polyphonic music with accompaniment of instruments. Again, Capgrave telling of what Henry V. did for the monks of Westminster or of Wales, he suggests that sua dans may refer to his compositions.

The Old Hall Manuscript, says Prof. Woodbridge in the 'Oxford History of Music' (Polyphonic Period, Part II.), 'is of great importance,' that an 'imperfect' examination of it is 'all that has yet been possible,' and that 'it should be made the subject of a special investigation.' Now Dr. Lederer has devoted many pages in his book to this manuscript, and he has come to the conclusion that the collection was made at latest in 1430 or 1440, in which case the compositions contained therein belong to the first quarter of the 15th century. Now Mr. W. Barclay Squire, in his 'Notes on an undescribed collection of English 15th century music,' considers that it was made 'in the latter part of the 15th century' ; and Prof. Woodbridge is of the same opinion. Dr. Lederer makes much of the compositions marked 'Roy Henry' ; he assigns them to Henry V., asserting that the term 'Roy' would not have been applied to his successor Henry VI., to whom Mr. Barclay Squire and the Oxford professor assign the compositions. The former, however, from various expressions, such as 'slight clues' or 'seems not improbable,' is evidently careful not to be too dogmatic. To compare the reasonings of Dr. Lederer with those of the English writers named is interesting, but to decide in favour of one or the other side impossible without minute study of the collection itself. This much, however, we will say : Dr. Lederer's arguments and explanations seem to us well worthy of consideration.

To the three-part song 'O rosa bella,' ascribed to Dunstable, and to other forms in which it appears—Prof. Wooldridge, by-the-way, remarks in the second volume of the 'Oxford History of Music' that 'only one of the seven existing copies of this [three-part] setting (that in the Vatican Library) bears the name of Dunstable'—Dr. Lederer devotes a very long chapter, part of which is taken up with criticism of the versions in the seventh volume of the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich,' disapproving of many of the emendations contained therein. His comments on the various forms deserve note, but within the compass of this brief notice it is impossible to enter into details. Only one passage shall be quoted. In her valuable article, 'Dunstable and the various settings of "O rosa bella"' ('Sammelbände der Internationalen Musikgesellschaft,' Zweiter Jahrgang, 1900-1901., p. 1), Miss Cecie Stainer, in referring to the Dijon Manuscript in which a third part is added to Dunstable's tenor and discant parts transposed, says that it is difficult to understand the reason of that transposition. Dr. Lederer suggests that this specimen of double counterpoint may be Dunstable's; indeed, that the third part is also his.

The following chapter is headed 'The composition technique of Dunstable and of his time'; in other words, it discusses the features which indicated a 'new art.' The author describes the nature of the melody proceeding by skips instead of by conjunct tones as in the church tones, although he is bound to admit that even in the latter there are foreshadowings of the former. Then he insists on the importance of instrumental music, of harps in the development of music, and his remark that Martin le Franc speaks of the English—or British, as Dr. Lederer prefers to call them—composers as 'harpeurs' is much to the point. To keep within reasonable limits we have only been able to touch on some of many comments and arguments in this interesting and thoughtful volume.

Symphonic variations on a negro air. By S. Coleridge-Taylor. Pianoforte solo arranged by the composer.

The Seasons. Pianoforte duet by Edward German.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Symphonic variations, written in October, 1905, were played for the first time at the Philharmonic Concert on June 14 last. The melody on which the variations are built is, the composer says, 'well known in America under the title of "I'm troubled in mind." It is a genuine negro tune, which, although hailing from America, so closely resembles an existent African song that the charge of white influence can scarcely be made.' As a hint to those who play the pianoforte arrangement, it may be said that in the orchestral score the melody is first announced softly by the trombones, accompanied by detached tremolando chords for the strings. For the rest the music is full of significance and character.

Mr. German's suite, 'The Seasons,' was composed for and produced at the Norfolk festival of 1899, and considering the genial character of the music it is somewhat surprising that the work has not previously been issued in a pianoforte arrangement for four hands. The suite comprises four movements, severally illustrating Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. The music of Spring is as gay and hopeful as a maiden of seventeen could wish; Summer is represented by a harvest dance, based on a melody well calculated to set the feet a-moving, and its vigour and spirit is kept up with exhilarating effect until the close; Autumn provides the necessary Andante contrast, and the music deals largely with an expressive theme which, soaring upwards over an octave and a sixth, afterwards subsides like an aspiration followed by a sigh. The Finale consists of two distinct sections, the first suggestive of the religious side of Christmas-tide, and the second, a tarantelle, illustrating Yuletide festivities. There results an excellent contrast, the spirit of each aspect of the winter season being happily caught. The pianoforte duet—which is by no means difficult—forms an excellent piece well calculated to give pleasure to performers and listeners alike.

The English Hymnal. With Tunes.

[Henry Frowde.]

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of this hymnal no one can deny that it is a comprehensive book. Moreover it is remarkably cosmopolitan in its constituents, so much so, indeed, as to almost belie the word English in the title. Strong contrasts are to be found within its covers—plain-song melodies (so-called) and Lutheran chorales; Welsh nonconformist tunes and a Russian Kontakion of the departed; composers the poles asunder as Richard Wagner and Ira D. Sankey, and so on. Immense pains have been taken in the preparation of the book, but is it altogether practical? Time alone will answer the question. In the meanwhile one or two features of the collection—we refer to the music only—may be commented upon. Part-singing by the congregation is tabooed, the melody only is to be sung; to this end many of the tunes appear in lower keys than heretofore in order to bring them within the compass of all voices, though Haydn's 'Austrian Hymn,' with its high F, has not been transposed. This downward transposition has not always been attended with the happiest results; for instance, 'Miles's Lane' (No. 364) appears in the key of A with an unwarrantable alteration of the melody, evidently from fear of the low A at the end of the second line: this note is changed to C sharp, with the result that Shrubsole's intent for the music to suit 'Let angels prostrate fall' is nullified, as the changed note suggests rising instead of falling. To call it the 'Modern form of second line' is hardly correct: it should be 'Ancient and Modern form,' though in justice to the new edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' it should be noted that the original version of line 2 has been restored—as, of course, it should be. Rhythm, so terribly lacking in congregational singing, does not receive much encouragement in this hymnal. The long note at the beginning of lines, and the somewhat arbitrary insertion of pauses at the end of lines—e.g., Horsley's tune to 'There is a green hill far away,' in which the pause between lines 3 and 4 absolutely destroys the sense of the words in verses 1, 2 and 4—apart from some remarkable time-awkwardnesses in some of the tunes—all these peculiarities will not help to promote hearty congregational singing.

The unearthing of some old English tunes is to be commended—one such is No. 135, 'Savannah' (or 'Herrnhut'), the latter being its original name, from John Wesley's Foundery Collection, 1742, a capital 7's tune which has most unaccountably escaped hymnal compilers. On the other hand there are many English 'traditional' melodies whose origin is doubtful, but in the choice of tunes no less than the selection of words the compilers have spread a wide net in order to catch all they can. While there is much that can be called excellent in 'The English Hymnal' its music strongly reflects the doctrinal views held by the compilers of the words. The literary part of the book does not come within the range of this notice, but considering the outcry there is at the non-attendance of men at church services in the present day, is it reasonable to expect thinking people to sing such rhymes as these?

There David stands with harp in hand
As master of the choir:
Ten thousand times that man were blest
That might this music hear.

Our Lady sings Magnificat
With tune surpassing sweet;
And all the Virgins bear their parts,
Sitting about her feet.

A word of praise is due for the excellent indexes with which the book is furnished. In the selection of tunes those composed by Sir John Stainer have been completely ignored.

Three Elizabethan Pastorals. For soprano or tenor, with pianoforte accompaniment by Herbert Brewer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Is it that the palmy days of English music are about to return, that so many composers are seeking inspiration from the Elizabethan period? No authors' names are given of the text of Dr. Brewer's three pastorals, but the spirit is that of the age of good Queen Bess. In the first song, entitled

'An Idyll,' we have a shepherd asking a nymph 'Where is thy liking?' and she, with nymph-like directness of expression, answers 'On thee! my dainty dear life! my love is fixed.' The second song, 'Amongst the willows,' would seem to be the sequel to the incident related in the first, for it ends with a 'kiss among the willows'; and the concluding ditty, a 'Morris dance,' might be supposed to form part of the festivities consequent on the question and answer in the first song. These pastorals were sung for the first time by Mr. John Coates at the recent Hereford festival where their acceptance testified to the composer's success. The 'Morris dance,' with its dainty and rhythmic accompaniment, so greatly pleased that it was repeated, and doubtless the like will happen when Mr. Coates sings it in London and elsewhere.

CHURCH MUSIC.

O Lord, Thou art my God. Composed by C. Lee Williams.

Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious. Composed by Myles B. Foster.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The anthem by Mr. Williams, composed for the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy at St. Paul's Cathedral in May last, while being eminently suitable for special celebrations is also well adapted for general use in churches where a musical service prevails. A short but impressive introduction for organ leads into a brief but emphatic chorus in four parts. This is followed by a passage for the sopranos, the tenors entering at the eighth bar and the full choir seven bars later. This ends impressively pianissimo, and is followed by a section which may be sung as a soprano solo or by the sopranos in unison, thus providing an excellent preparation for the Finale which is preceded by a choral recitative. The Finale itself is of vigorous character, but the work ends pianissimo and adagio with the words 'A strength to the needy in his distress.'

Mr. Foster's anthem opens with a four-part chorus allegretto non troppo, followed by a recitative passage for sopranos which leads to the delivery, by the tenors and basses in unison, of Christ's command to His Disciples to go forth and teach all nations. A short chorus and tenor solo lead the way to a Finale of diatonic and emphatic character which concludes with a double Amen.

Benedictus in F. By Charles Macpherson.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat. By G. F. Cobb.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The setting of the Benedictus by Mr. Charles Macpherson is of a solid and direct character which makes it peculiarly suitable for large churches. The composer is sparing in his use of the organ, the voices frequently singing unaccompanied, with the result that when the king of instruments does speak it is with impressive effect. The music contains several bold harmonic transitions, but it is diatonic in character and will present few difficulties to the average choir.

The evening service by the late Mr. Gerard Cobb is very simple but dignified and devotional. The choral writing is in two parts, severally for boys and men respectively in unison. The Magnificat opens with the delivery by the men of the opening sentence to a familiar Gregorian intonation, which is answered by the boys with excellent effect. This method is pursued, varied only by the men and boys occasionally singing together in unison. In the Nunc dimittis an antiphonal method (boys and men) is employed until the Gloria is reached, when the setting used in the Magnificat is repeated.

NEW PART-SONGS.

Come to me, gentle sleep. Words by Mrs. Hemans. Music by Frederic H. Cowen.

Morning. Words and music by G. Molyneux Palmer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The above are two graceful and expressive part-songs for S.A.T.B., which may well merit the attention of conductors of choral societies. Dr. Cowen's music is as inviting as the lines by Mrs. Hemans. Melody and harmony are alike gracious and soothing, and although they are little calculated to induce sleep, will certainly produce a tranquil frame of mind in the listener.

Mr. Palmer's music, if more contrapuntal in character, will provide excellent practice for independence and delicacy of part-singing. The tempo is too slow for the music to be difficult to read, and the effect will well repay careful rehearsal.

THE AMERICAN REINAGLE.

DEAR SIR,—On p. 617 of your esteemed publication Mr. Frank Kidson is puzzled by a certain A. Reinagle. This certainly is Alexander, the 'American' Reinagle. Mr. Kidson will find a few biographical data in my 'Bibliography of Early Secular American Music'—a copy is at the British Museum. Alexander was quite an able musician. It was he who accompanied the 'cellist Hugh Reinagle, his brother, to Lisbon in 1784. Hugh died there of consumption on March 19, 1785, and Alexander returned to Portsmouth (where he was born, 1756). One year later—1786, not 1757!—Alexander appears in America. He died at Baltimore, Ind., on September 21, 1809.

Hoping that my hasty memorandum has not added to the puzzle of the Reinagle genealogy:

I am, yours respectfully,
O. G. SONNECK.

PETER CORNELIUS.

DEAR SIR,—I have been reading your very interesting article upon Peter Cornelius and his works. Referring to his 'Old soldier's dream,' I noted the statement that several male-voice societies had included it in their programmes. Allow me to say that the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society placed it in their programme in February last. The composition was taken up con amore by the members of the Society, and it proved to be such a favourite with the audience that in all probability we shall include it in the programme of our annual concert in February next. May I also add that Mr. George Riseley, the conductor of this Society, thinks very highly of this composition, and we fully intend to give it a rendering that shall be worthy of the music.

Yours sincerely,
J. F. W. TRATMAN
(Hon. Secretary).

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It features a key signature of two flats (B-flat and E-flat) and a 3/4 time signature. The melody is primarily in the treble clef, with piano accompaniment in both treble and bass clefs. Dynamics include f (forte), p (piano), and pp (pianissimo). The lyrics are written below the vocal line, with some words appearing above the staff for emphasis or phrasing. The score is divided into systems, with the first system containing the first four staves and the subsequent systems containing two staves each.

Obituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret :

On August 27, at his residence, Monkshatch, Guildford, ANDREW KINSMAN HICHENS, aged seventy-three. Mr. Hichens, a well-known stockbroker and held in the highest esteem in the financial life of the City, took a keen and practical interest in music, and was a generous supporter of the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society. Literature and painting, in a lesser degree perhaps, were included in his cultured life. He will be greatly missed in the business and artistic circles which were favoured by his genial presence.

On August 30, at Glasgow, EDWARD ROBERT TERRY, aged sixty-five, for many years musical adviser to Messrs. Chappell & Co.

On September 14, at his residence, 240, Camden Road, GEORGES JACOBI, aged sixty-six. A pupil of De Bériot at Brussels and afterwards a student at the Paris Conservatoire, M. Jacobi played in the orchestra when Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' was first performed in Paris in 1861—a memorable, uproarious, and disastrous performance which inspired many jokes, one of them being 'qu'on s'ennui aux récitatifs, et qu'on se tanne aux airs.' It was not, however, as a violinist that Jacobi achieved fame, but as a conductor of light opera and ballets—first in Paris, and for twenty-six years (1872-1898) at the Alhambra, London, for which theatre he composed no fewer than 103 grand ballets and divertissements, many of which were performed in the cities of America, in Brussels, Berlin, Munich, Rome, and Paris. His best-known comedy-opera is 'The black crook.' A master of melody, his compositions reflected his own genial, warm-hearted nature. Admirably fulfilling their purpose, they are devoid of that vulgarity usually associated with the variety theatre in England. In addition to being an excellent conductor, M. Jacobi excelled as a teacher; in 1896 he was appointed a professor of composition at the Royal College of Music.

ROBERT NORFOLK, at Leeds, aged seventy-seven, who for no less than sixty-five years had, as boy and man, sung in the choir of St. John-the-Evangelist's, the interesting Stuart church which is the oldest public building in Leeds. The record, if not unique, must be rare, and it deserves mention all the more because 'Bob Norfolk,' as he was affectionately styled by all who knew him, was a singularly lovable character. Of humble origin, he was by nature a gentleman in the best sense of that word. He was also by nature a singer, and at a choir supper or some such parochial entertainment was often persuaded to warble an old-fashioned ditty with a charm and refinement of phrasing that would have done credit to a much more cultured vocalist. His memory will long be cherished by those who knew him.

MR. LUTHER HALL, for many years accompanist to the Glasgow Choral Union. By the members of the Union Mr. Hall was held in very high esteem both for his personal worth and for his gifts as a chorus accompanist.

MRS. STEPHEN MASSINGBERD (daughter of Judge Vernon Lushington), of Gunby Hall, Burgh-le-Marsh, Lincolnshire. Mrs. Massingberd was the founder of the Spilsby musical competition.

The half-yearly concert of the Students of the University Conservatorium of Music, Melbourne, took place on July 20, under the direction of Prof. Franklin Peterson. The programme included Mozart's overture 'Seraglio' and part of Haydn's 'Military' symphony by the orchestra, who also took part in Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, the first movements of Weber's Concerto in E flat, and Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor, and in the last movement of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. The various branches of the Conservatorium—pianoforte, violin and vocal—were all ably represented by various students. The Town Hall was crowded with an appreciative audience.

THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Of all the Three Choirs festivals the Hereford meeting seems in one sense to bulk the largest, for Hereford, being considerably smaller than either Worcester or Gloucester, is the more easily moved to festivity by such an event. Nowhere else, for example, is so thorough an attempt made to decorate the town, and even though the arches and the like erected last month might be convicted of crudity, their very existence showed the interest taken by the whole community in the event, while the extensive hospitality exercised during the week afforded another convincing proof of the generality of this festive feeling. It may be mentioned that this was due in a great measure to the energy and initiative of the popular mayor—Alderman Gurney.

The recent meeting, the 183rd of these Three Choirs Festivals, opened on Sunday, September 9, with a service in which chorus and orchestra took part. The music included Dr. C. Harford Lloyd's anthem, written in 1887, 'Give the Lord the honour,' and Mr. Ivor A. Atkins's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D. The sermon by the Dean of Gloucester deserves mention, for the preacher had unearthed a precedent for church festivals which, if age be anything, should be irresistible as an argument against those who would disestablish the Three Choirs. Certainly it is a singular coincidence that in the 5th century a sacred drama, or mystery play, called 'The Apostles,' should have been given in the great cathedral of St. Sophia in Constantinople, but the conditions are probably as dissimilar as the works of Roumanos (the author of that work) and Elgar, and it must not be imagined that defenders of modern cathedral festivals have no better argument than is afforded by an interesting historical parallel.

The programme of the festival proper included five novelties, two of them choral works of magnitude. The first, performed on September 12, Sir Hubert Parry's 'The soul's ransom,' has for its sub-title 'A psalm of the poor,' and described on the title-page of the score as a 'Sinfonia Sacra.' This description was also applied to his Gloucester work, 'The love that casteth out fear,' and like that composition it may be described as a didactic poem, the text taken chiefly from Scripture, set to music partly symphonic, partly dramatic in character, but whose general structure is determined by the form assumed by the text. The words are arranged by the composer, to whom may be attributed some verses which form an epilogue, the conclusion of which may be quoted, since they supply the moral of the whole work :

Truth will not die,
In every soul of man it lives;
The Spirit cannot lie!
To each and all the choice it gives
To rate the tempting world aright
And to esteem it light;
To ward the ransomed soul from stain,
And make it worthy to attain
To flawless harmony, divinely pure,
With that which was, and is, and shall for evermore endure.

Those who are acquainted with the composer's methods will realise how he has dealt with a subject so completely in accord with his temperament, but at the same time it must be allowed that there is less of a tendency to slip into mannerisms of idiom than one has noticed of late in his music. The colouring is clearer, the handling of the orchestra is rather more subtle. There are two solo parts. The baritone assumes the rôle of prophet, and his music is for the most pure declamation, simply accompanied, a more lyrical style being allowed the soprano, who comes in with words of consolation and whose music is very tender in expression. The chorus is treated in Sir Hubert's accustomed vigorous, straightforward style, and is grateful to the singer, effective, and even impressive. The work, which is conceived in a lofty spirit, was certainly well sung under the composer's direction, and the soloists, Madame Albani and Mr. Plunket Greene, put all the expression of which they were capable into the music.

Dr. Walford Davies, in his 'Lift up your hearts'—performed on September 11—achieved a difficult task, and if it must be held that he has not entirely attained his ideal, its difficulty must be borne in mind. He calls his work 'a sacred symphony,' and a study of its form and character leads to the conclusion that he has made an effort to combine and reconcile abstract symphonic form with more or less dramatic expression. There are five movements, of which four are precisely analogous to those of the classical symphony. A solemn introduction, in which bass soloist and chorus appear and give the keynote—both musical and moral—to the work, leads to an Allegro for orchestra alone, somewhat in the vein of Brahms. This is most successful; the ideas are elevated and the orchestral treatment shows more richness, breadth, and variety than has hitherto been noticeable in the composer's work. Again, in an Allegretto amabile, which follows, we have in essence the Minuet and Trio of the older symphony. The subjects again suggest the influence of Brahms in his more genial mood, when inspired by the Volkslied, and the mixture of rhythms ( $\frac{3}{4}$  and  $\frac{3}{8}$ ) is most happy, since it seems quite spontaneous. The third movement, styled 'Soliloquy,' is a solo, chiefly declamatory, for the bass vocalist. It is thoughtfully done, but its relevance to the artistic scheme is not apparent. In the fourth movement a Largo espressivo, the mixture of orchestral and vocal music seems still less happy, the 'Three sayings of Jesus' sung by a semi-chorus giving the impression of irrelevant interruptions in the course of an otherwise impressive orchestral movement. The most successful attempt to run choral music in the symphonic mould is in the Finale, in which the Ter Sanctus from the Communion office is made the subject of a series of Variations after the 'Chaconne' model. The plan of the movement is excellent, but its execution is not on the same level, and the composer appears still to lack the fine sense of proportion necessary to deal with music which should be conceived on a large scale. Refinement and subtlety of drawing is always admirable, but the painter of heroic frescoes does not use the sable of the water-colour artist. In the chamber concert with which the festival—by a tradition peculiar to Hereford—ends, there were heard Dr. Walford Davies's 'Six Pastorals' for vocal quartet, string quartet, and pianoforte. Here one felt that the composer had found his feet, and that the means were perfectly adequate to the effect. It can only be the singular combination that would hinder these very beautiful pieces from becoming truly popular.

At the orchestral concert on September 12, another novelty was heard—Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's suite 'Dreamland.' Though described as being 'composed for this festival,' it was also stated to have been written in 1900, and not only the opus number '3,' but the style of the work suggests that it is an early composition. It is highly melodious, cleverly scored, and effective, but quite destitute of the individuality of his more recent compositions. At this concert songs with orchestral accompaniment by the Gloucester and Worcester organists were given. Dr. Brewer's 'Three Elizabethan Pastorals'—sung with tremendous verve by Mr. John Coates—proved most dainty, genial compositions, the music happily wedded to the quaint verse and orchestrated with admirable lightness of touch. Mr. Atkins's two songs—'Too late' and 'Thou art come'—made an attempt at emotional and dramatic expression that was enhanced by the warmth of the orchestral colouring employed. Mr. Atkins has in a short time arrived at an enviable power of handling an orchestra, and only a little more repose is necessary to give full effect to these songs, which were ably sung by Mr. William Higley.

The most noteworthy feature of the programme was Bach's Mass in B minor, of which the latter half, from the Credo onwards, was given. The Sanctus was very impressively rendered, but some of the earlier choruses had hardly an adequate interpretation. That intonation was not absolutely flawless at so early an hour of the day was no new experience, but beyond this the spirit of the solemn, sombre choruses was not caught quite so happily as that of the more jubilant movements. Berlioz's Te Deum was interesting, and if its 'tremendous' effects were not realizable, the use of the great organ in the choir in alternation with the orchestra at the west end proved most satisfactory. Sir Edward Elgar, who is now a citizen of Hereford, occupied a considerable share of the programme. His 'Gerontius' and 'Apostles' received intensely impressive interpretations, reflecting the utmost credit on Dr. Sinclair, the very able conductor of the festival, and the 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings was brilliantly played under the composer's own direction. Dr. Sinclair also deserves credit for a finished performance of Brahms's third Symphony, the only symphony—if Dr. Davies's work be excepted—heard at the festival. 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' and 'The Hymn of Praise,' are standing dishes at these festivals, and occupied their accustomed places. At the chamber concerts the Nora Clench Quartet played quartets by Beethoven (Op. 135) and Tănău (Op. 7), and at the orchestral concert Miss Evangeline Anthony, a Hereford lady, played one of Mozart's violin concertos. There was a lavish supply of principal vocalists; in addition to those already mentioned must be recalled the names—in alphabetical order—of Madame Conly, Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Agnes Nicholls, and Madame Siviter; Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Muriel Foster, and Miss Gwladys Roberts; Messrs. Beaumont, Ben Davies, and William Green; Messrs. Dalton Baker, Ffrangcon-Davies, and Watkin Mills. There was a first-rate orchestra of over seventy London players (Mr. W. Frye Parker, leader), and the organ was taken by Mr. Atkins at the morning performances and Dr. Brewer in the evenings, the latter also assuming the duties of accompanist at the chamber concert.

COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

The following is a list of forthcoming Competition Festivals, arranged in order of date, with the names of secretaries:

- BLACKPOOL.—October 3, 4, 5, and 6. Mr. Lionel H. Franceys, Williams Deacon's Bank. One of the most important festivals of its kind.

- PONTEFRAC.—May 14, 15, and 16. Mr. Oswald Holmes, Market Place.
- FARNHAM (SURREY).—May 21 and 22. Miss Fordati, Ridgway, Farnham.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The artistic interest of the Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall is being fully maintained, not only in regard to excellence of performances but by the introduction of novelties. This season the rule seems to have been established of introducing new works on Tuesday and Thursday in each week, and consequently there is a considerable number to notice in the present survey.

On August 25 the first performance in England was given of 'Eight Russian folk-songs for orchestra' (Op. 58) by M. Anatole C. Liadoff, a Russian composer born in 1855 in St. Petersburg, at the Conservatoire of which city he is now professor of harmony and composition. Together with M. Balakirev and Liapounov, M. Liadoff was commissioned by his government to collect the folk-songs of Russia, and the orchestral work under notice is, in part, an outcome of his labours. The eight little pieces are quite short and unpretentious, being little more than effective orchestral presentations of the melodies. The first is a 'Hymn tune,' which is followed by a 'Christmas song,' the themes of each being of naïve character. The next number is a 'Lament,' having a sad little melody that seems to weep itself to rest. Contrast comes with a 'Humorous song,' so short that it ends when it only just seems to have begun! To this succeeds 'The legend of the birds,' based on a seven-bar melody and containing dainty passages for the wood-wind. 'A cradle song,' the theme of which consists of a phrase of two bars, is arranged for muted strings only, and has a peculiar, weird effect. The subsequent 'Dancing song' is the most attractive number of the suite, possessing considerable character and the treatment being in more important manner than that of its fellows. 'The village dance,' which concludes the work, comes somewhat as an anti-climax, but it is gay and vigorous, and brilliantly scored.

Three evenings later, on August 28, was introduced to this country M. Reinhold Glière's Symphony in E flat (Op. 8). This composer, born at Kieff in 1874, studied at the Moscow Conservatoire from 1894 to 1900. The symphony was composed in 1899 and produced three years later by the Russian Musical Society at Moscow. The work is clear in design, sane in expression and well scored. The themes are somewhat weak, but they are so rationally and cleverly developed that, combined with the merits previously noted, the work excites esteem. The principal subject of the first movement, Allegro moderato, may be described as mildly gay and pastoral, the second as lyrical in character, and the movement in its entirety might be taken as an illustration of a shepherd who is happy with his Phyllis. The Scherzo opens with a chattering theme contrasting effectively with the broad, flowing melody of the Trio portion. The Andante is gentle and graceful in expression and grave rather than melancholy in character. The Finale is the least satisfactory portion of the work owing to the triteness of its principal subject, but it is spirited and contains some brilliant scoring.

The common name for a witch among Russian peasant folk is 'Baba-yaga,' and this is the title of a 'Tableau musical' by M. Liadoff, heard for the first time in England on August 30. The music belongs to the same class as the 'Danse Macabre' by M. Saint-Saëns, and deals largely with the gruesome and grotesque. It, however, possesses some musical interest and may be accepted as a clever orchestral joke which ends before it becomes tiresome.

Such flattering criticisms have been read of late in Continental papers concerning the compositions of the Danish composer August Enna, born at Nakschow in 1860, that considerable interest attached to the performance of his work entitled 'Märchen,' which was played for the first time in London on September 4. Although styled a symphonic poem, the composition is in reality a suite consisting of four distinct and independent movements, between which the usual pauses are made. The work opens with a Lento maestoso of grave and dignified character, which leads into the first subject of the Allegro con brio, distinguished by exuberance and impassioned expression. The second movement, Andante lento, might be described as a song of hope, the general suggestion of the music being that of confidence rather than melancholy. The Scherzo, if more commonplace than its companions, is bright and attractive in sentiment. The opening of the Finale possesses considerable solemnity, approaching that of a funeral march, and the principal subject of the succeeding quick section has a certain weirdness which imparts character to the music.

The symphonic poem entitled 'St. George,' by Mr. George Dorlay—introduced to London on September 6—is programme music of an obvious character. It illustrates Schiller's ballad 'The fight with the dragon,' and the incidents related in the poem are easy to follow in the music. At the opening we have bustling passages to depict the excitement of the townspeople on the arrival of the victorious knight with the body of the slain monster. An adagio section represents the reproaches of the Superior to the knight for his having disobeyed the command not to approach the dragon's lair, and finally we have a return of the exultant mood of the opening to suggest the Superior's forgiveness of the knight's disobedience and his restoration to spiritual favour. The themes are bold, if at times commonplace, and their treatment and scoring show facility and knowledge of effect, but Mr. Dorlay's music is not of a high class.

Another work of descriptive character, but more artistic in design than the preceding, was a tone-poem, 'Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch' (Departure and shipwreck), by Herr Ernst Boehe, a composer who has not yet attained the honour of being included in musical dictionaries. It may be mentioned, therefore, that he was born in 1880 at Munich, where he studied under Ludwig Thuille and Prof. Schwarz. The tone-poem played for the first time in England on September 11, is the first of four 'Episodes from Odysseus's wanderings.' From a preface attached to the opening section we gather that the composer's intention is to illustrate the incidents which befell Ulysses immediately after the fall of Troy. The work begins with the delivery of the hero's theme, given out by the bass clarinet, bassoon and lower strings, which after eight bars glides into the anticipation of the subject associated with the hero's love for Penelope and his yearning for home. These, together with another theme expressive of hope and aspiration, form the principal material of the work, a background to which is provided by the rejoicings of the army as they prepare to embark for the homeward journey. The storm in which Ulysses is wrecked and made a wanderer provides a dramatic episode and is illustrated in a musical manner, the employment of the themes suggesting the emotional import of the storm rather than being a realistic portrayal of its turmoil. At the close the theme of the hero's yearning returns and forms the chief subject of the Coda which brings the work to a poetical close. The design is clear and the development of the subjects rational and picturesque, and although the orchestration at times shows the influence of Strauss, extravagances and exaggerations are avoided. The general sanity and poetic atmosphere of the work created such a favourable impression, that at the close the composer was called three times to the platform.

On September 13 the first performance in England was given of the Entr'acte Symphonique from Alfred Bruneau's opera 'Messidor,' produced in Paris in 1897. 'Messidor' is described as 'A poem of labour,' and its libretto, by Zola, is concerned with a rapacious capitalist who diverts a river to serve his own ends, irrespective of the misfortune he brings on others. The Entr'acte comes between the third and fourth acts, and is described by the composer as 'a fully developed prelude in a grave mood, which announces the theme of "Spring" that dominates the whole succeeding act.' This theme is of great melodic beauty; those of 'Water,' 'Love,' and of 'Toil' combined with it are also expressive; their treatment is most interesting, the scoring subtle and sonorous, and the entire movement one of great interest and charm.

Three interesting orchestral pieces, collectively styled a 'Symphonic Triptych,' by M. Jan Blockx, director of the Antwerp Conservatoire, were played for the first time in England on September 18. Severally entitled 'All Souls' Day,' 'Christmas Eve,' and 'Easter,' the pieces are described by the composer as impressions produced by these anniversaries of the church. M. Blockx has further explained his intentions by prefacing each movement with an indication of his outlook. The picture for 'All Souls' Day is as follows: 'Grey, dark, frosty sky, constant tolling of bells, during which the prayers of the devout are sent to Heaven.' Of the second movement he writes: 'In a stable at Bethlehem the Christ Child sleeps bedded on straw. The shepherds celebrate with song the birth of the Saviour, and the poetic basis of 'Easter' is described as follows: 'The joy-bells greet the resurrection of the Christ, everywhere the voices of the believers mingle with the organ and the clanging of the bells in thankfulness and praise to the Almighty.' The first movement is somewhat lugubrious as well as melancholy in character, but the music is impressive and a remarkable feature of the scoring, which is rich and sonorous, is the clever and effective manner in which the lower tones of a grand pianoforte are employed in suggesting the resonance of the bells. The Christmas section, typically pastoral in character, is chiefly orchestrated with wood-wind. The brass is silent throughout the movement and the part-writing very independent. The Finale is heavily scored, and again very effective use is made of the lower tones of the pianoforte. The character of the music scarcely suggests to English ears the spiritual joys of Eastertide, but the work is not without interest. At the same concert were performed Bach's Suite for two oboes, bassoons and strings, and Rubinstein's Pianoforte concerto No. 4, in B minor, Op. 70, the solo part of which was played with conspicuous brilliancy by Miss Gertrude Meller.

Mr. Norman O'Neill is now favourably known to a considerable number of music-lovers as a clever and genial composer, and his overture 'In springtime' (Op. 21), introduced to Londoners on September 20, bears further witness to his imagination and craftsmanship. If the principal subject can scarcely be said to possess the freshness of spring, it is joyous and exuberant and is developed in an exhilarating and musicianly manner. The second subject suggests the romance to which the poets tell us the thoughts of the young man lightly turn at this period of the year, and it entwines itself closely with its more vigorous companion. Other themes are duly presented and all goes merrily as marriage bells until the work ends with an emphatic Coda.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Riseley, have arranged to give performances of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Elgar's 'King Olaf,' 'Messiah,' and extracts from Wagner's 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhäuser' at their four concerts during the season.

Under Mr. James Bending the North Bristol Choral Society have taken in hand Sullivan's 'Golden legend' and Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.'

The Young Men's Christian Association (Mr. W. A. Barter, conductor), are rehearsing Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ.'

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Choral and Orchestral Union have issued their prospectus for the coming season. The choral works announced for performance are, 'Elijah,' 'Messiah,' 'Lohengrin,' and Verdi's 'Requiem.' The Pollokshields Philharmonic Society—a choir doing capital work under Mr. John Cullen's experienced guidance—will take up Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride' as their principal work, and will as last year give a series of chamber concerts under the direction of Mr. Henri Verbrugghen. The choirs of the Central and Southern Sections of the Young Men's Christian Association, under Mr. R. L. Reid, will devote their energies to the 'Messiah' and the 'Creation,' while the Sunday School Union Choir conducted by Mr. Alec Steven will essay Spohr's 'Last judgment.'

Dumbarton Choral Union (Mr. E. C. Owston, conductor) will again take up the 'Creation.' In addition to a symphony by Gade and a pianoforte concerto, the Cecilia Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. E. R. Joachim) will bring to a first hearing in Glasgow some smaller pieces, including the Romance and two dances from 'The Conqueror' (German), the ballet music from 'The two widows' (Smetana), and a new overture composed by the conductor.

A hopeful sign of the times is the formation of the Glasgow Bach Choir, to be conducted by Mr. J. M. Diack.

The new choir will study the Magnificat, 'Sleepers, wake' and 'Bide with us.' Mr. Learmont Drysdale has been appointed conductor of the Glasgow Select Choir, a position so long and so ably filled by Mr. J. Millar Craig.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is impossible to forecast the season's music in Liverpool without a keen sense of satisfaction. The Philharmonic Society will, as usual, give twelve concerts. Among the works to be performed are Beethoven's Choral symphony, Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' the 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2), Bach's cantata 'Phœbus and Pan,' the Finale to 'Die Meistersinger,' and Verdi's 'Requiem.' There will be also two special orchestral concerts. Dr. Cowen still remains conductor.

The Hallé Concert Society announces four concerts, conducted by Dr. Richter. As it is two seasons since Dr. Richter and his orchestra played in Liverpool, it goes without saying that the announcement has caused general interest.

Five 'ladies' concerts' will be given by the Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. Granville Bantock, and three 'gentlemen's concerts' by the same organization. Among the works set down for performance are Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben,' Dvorák's symphonic poem 'Ein Heldenlied,' Bach's 'Brandenburg' concerto, César Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for pianoforte, Granville Bantock's 'Sappho' prelude, Gluck's overture 'Iphigenia in Aulis,' Siebelius's second symphony, and incidental music to 'Pelleas and Melisande,' and Paul Dukas's 'L'apprenti Sorcier,' the last three being given for the first time in Liverpool. Mr. Henry J. Wood will conduct a Brahms symphony towards the close of the season.

The Symphony Orchestra, which is composed chiefly of members of the Richter and Philharmonic Orchestras, warmly encouraged by its success last season, intends to give twelve concerts in the Sun Hall, under the direction of Mr. Vasco Akeroyd. The symphonies to be performed include Tchaikovsky's No. 4, Beethoven's C minor, Cowen's 'Scandinavian,' Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica.'

Mr. A. P. Mignot has arranged four Schiever Quartet concerts, which will be held at the Hardman Street Rooms. All serious music-lovers in this district will welcome this announcement and the opportunity it affords of wishing the distinguished enterprise a season of pronounced success.

As usual, the Societa Armonica will give three concerts in St. George's Hall, their programme to include Brahms's Symphony No. 4, Granville Bantock's new 'Sappho' prelude, Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and Dvorák's 'Symphonic Variations.'

Another Society to put forward an interesting scheme is the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, whose energetic conductor is Mr. Harry Evans. This body of singers, which holds a high place in popular regard, will give Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha,' the 'Messiah,' and Bach's 'Passion.'

The West Kirby Choral Society, started some five years ago at the instance of Dr. W. B. Brierley, of West Kirby, having long outgrown its day of small things will give 'Elijah' at its second concert. The Hoylake Male-Voice Choir will also give several concerts, whilst an interesting programme is in process of completion by the secretary of the Birkenhead Glee and Madrigal Society.

The Fairfield Choral and Orchestral Society is to perform Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In forecasting the winter season's work a beginning must be made with the eight concerts—limited to subscribers—of the Gentlemen's Concerts. The Hallé Orchestra will provide the band, and Dr. Hans Richter will again conduct. The committee of the Hallé Concerts Society—whose guarantors now number one hundred and eighty—has not yet issued its detailed prospectus; but it is understood that of the twenty concerts six will be choral and fourteen orchestral. It is well, perhaps, that the number of choral concerts is reduced, for last year the choir had a too exacting task set before it. The choral works in rehearsal, under Mr. R. H. Wilson, are 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Dream of Gerontius,' Bach's Mass in B minor, 'Faust' (Berlioz), and Elgar's 'The Kingdom.' We are not likely to listen to any new 'orchestral epic,' but Dr. Cowen's 'Scandinavian' symphony will have a place in the programmes: Dr. Richter will of course conduct.

This is, according to date, the jubilee year of the Hallé concerts; but—possibly because there was a break in the series during the season 1860-61—there does not appear to be any present design to commemorate the event. Mr. Brand Lane, however, seems trying to make his series of popular subscription concerts generously celebrational of his twenty-five years of musical effort in the city. The first of the eight concerts is to be given on October 27, and Mr. Lane furnishes for it a list of vocal and instrumental principals, in addition to his own Philharmonic choir, that looks phenomenally lavish even in these modern days of musical bounty. The oratorio of 'Samson' is to be performed at the second concert. Our youngest offspring of Apollo, the Promenade Smoking Concerts—no one promenades!—established last season by the enterprise of members of the Hallé Orchestra, has been encouraged to renew its appearances, again under the conductorship of Mr. S. Speelman. A series of ten concerts will be given, and the band will again number about fifty performers. The instrumental selections will constitute a strong, worthy, and interesting feature in the promised programmes, although the names of British composers to appear in the list are those only of Dr. Cowen and Mr. Edward German. A suite by Sibelius will be played for the first time in Manchester, and we may hope to hear the new concerto written by our clever young pianist and composer, Mr. Edward Isaacs.

The Brodsky Quartet Concerts, six in number, will be resumed, and Dr. Brodsky, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. S. Speelman and Mr. Carl Fuchs will once more comprise the accomplished Quartet. The concerts at the Schiller-Anstalt, four in number, under the direction of Mr. Carl Fuchs, remind us how much the history and progress of music in Manchester have been impelled and determined by the Teutonic element which pervades the commercial life of this city more than that of any other that could be named. The Vocal Society—with Dr. Henry Watson still faithful to the directorate—is entering upon its fortieth season. It will continue to make representative a distinct branch of the musical art, and to provide opportunity and scope for the best of our vocal talent to exercise itself in public. Mr. Cross's series of weekly popular concerts will be resumed on October 20, and Mr. Cross announces the re-establishment of his large singing classes (both notations), which were discontinued some few years ago. To this record must be added the work of at least two of the many amateur and private musical organizations that begirt the city and have their harmonious life within it—the Gentlemen's Glee Club and the Beethoven Society. The former, under the conductorship of Dr. Henry Watson, flourishes greatly at the end of seventy-six years of history. The latter, the principal of our amateur orchestral societies, has its orchestra of about eighty performers still under the direction of Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell. Dr. Pyne's weekly organ recitals at the Town Hall are being eagerly anticipated by a host of amateurs, as well as by the general public. Mr. Max Mayer's chamber concerts will again add a personal as well as distinctly artistic interest to the complete scheme of our annual feast of music, which bids fair to equal in character the best of its predecessors.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The chief item of interest in local choral circles has been the first visit of Dr. Coward to undertake his new duties as conductor of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, in succession to Mr. J. M. Preston. The programme for the season comprises Brahms's 'Requiem,' Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' music, 'Messiah,' and 'Elijah.'

The Amateur Vocal Society is rehearsing Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' which has not been heard here for some time, and the Philharmonic Society will present Haydn's 'Seasons.'

Mr. Edgar Bainton, the new conductor of the Postal Telegraph Choral Society, proposes an energetic and interesting season by his selection of Bach's Church Cantata 'O Light everlasting,' Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' Stanford's 'Revenge,' and Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride.'

The lecture course of the Literary and Philosophical Society includes no fewer than four evenings devoted to music: Mr. W. H. Hadow, on 'Opera in the 18th century'; Mr. R. R. Terry, on 'Forgotten English composers'; Mr. J. E. Jeffries (organist of Newcastle Cathedral), on 'Bach,' and the latter gentleman will also conduct a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Antigone.'

The Newcastle and District Teachers' Musical Society is rehearsing Schubert's 'Mass in F,' and the Students' Choral Society at the Armstrong College will study Mozart's 'Requiem.'

The South Shields Orchestral Society will attack no fewer than three symphonies—Mozart in E flat, Schumann in B flat, and Stanford's 'Irish'—besides overtures and suites.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Only a few of the prospectuses for the ensuing season are at present available, but judging from those to hand it will be as busy as ever.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill, has selected Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' for its first concert, to be followed by Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Gounod's 'Redemption.'

The City Orchestral Concerts will give their usual two performances, with Beethoven's fifth and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphonies as the chief features.

A Choral Union is being promoted by the City Education Committee for the students of the evening schools, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Richards, and Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' has been selected for performance.

Miss Cantelo will commence the tenth season of her chamber concerts on November 13, for which she has engaged the Brodsky Quartet for each of the three concerts of the season.

At Boston, Mr. G. H. Gregory's Choral Class is studying Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin'; the Kirton and Swineshead Choral Societies will prepare Bennett's 'May Queen,' and the Leicester New Choral Society, under Mr. Hancock's direction, proposes to give Handel's 'Jephtha,' Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron,' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.'

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A final rehearsal of the party of 300 choralists from Sheffield and Leeds, announced to visit Rhineland during the last week in September, took place in the Albert Hall, Sheffield, on September 13. Dr. Coward had made great exertions to train the forces up to his own exacting standard, and the results justified his hopes and labours. The 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'Messiah,' Weekes's madrigal 'As Vesta was descending,' and choruses by Macfarren, Fanning, Elgar and Parry (the Finale to Act 1 of 'Judith') formed a programme well designed to exemplify the quality of Yorkshire choralism to the critical audiences of Düsseldorf, Cologne and Frankfurt.

A conference of choirmasters, schoolmasters, and music teachers was held at Firth Hall on September 14, 15, and 17. Lantern lectures were given by Mr. J. S. Curwen on 'The story of Tonic sol-fa,' and by Mr. L. C. Venables on 'How does Tonic sol-fa help choirmasters.' Papers were read by Mr. J. Ibbetson on 'Music in schools'; Mr. J. H. Parkes on 'The violin class in the elementary school'; Mr. Frank Kidson (of Leeds) on 'Yorkshire folk-songs'; Miss Eleanor Coward on 'The common faults of solo-singing'; Mr. J. A. Rodgers on 'The training and management of volunteer choirs'; Mr. T. Duffell on 'Amateur operatic experiences'; and Mr. John Graham on 'Competitive festivals and what they are doing for music.' The chairmen were Mr. Lawrence Chadwick, Dr. Arthur Somervell, Dr. Coward, and the Bishop of Sheffield.

The choral and orchestral societies have resumed their activities—mainly confined to rehearsals at present—and we are promised an interesting season. The most important event will be the performance, for the first time in the city, of Elgar's 'The Apostles,' to be given by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society. The concert is fixed for December 18, and Mr. Henry J. Wood will conduct.

The Sheffield Musical Union promises Berlioz's 'Faust,' of which Dr. Coward may be relied upon to give a picturesque performance, and 'Israel in Egypt,' a work well suited to this powerful chorus. An engagement to sing in Beethoven's Choral Symphony at Queen's Hall, under Dr. Richter, is also among the Union's fixtures.

The Sheffield Choral Union is unfortunately in difficulties. A series of excellent concerts having resulted in heavy financial losses, the Society will at present be continued as a vocal class for the rehearsal only of choral works. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion will be the first work studied.

The Walkley Musical Society (Mr. H. Brown, conductor), announces 'St. Paul' and Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind,' and the Rotherham Choral Society (Mr. T. Brameld, conductor) Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio and 'Elijah.'

The Chapeltown Sacred Harmonic Society (Mr. T. Bool, conductor) will perform Bach's 'Abide with us,' Spohr's 'Last judgment,' and Mendelssohn's '13th Psalm.'

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

At the Theater des Westens, an Italian children's operatic company has given performances of Rossini's 'Barber of Seville' and been applauded by the thoughtless crowds who do not object to hearing a masterpiece ruined by juvenile singers of from nine to fifteen years of age. The music was of course transposed almost throughout, and the effect of these much-worn childish voices was painful. The prima-donna of the company is a fifteen-year-old girl, L. Levi, who has a good voice and displays decided histrionic gifts.—Carl Goldmark's opera 'The cricket on the hearth' has been revived at the New Royal Opera Theatre. Thanks to the charm of its graceful and beautifully-scored music, no less than to a very excellent performance under Dr. E. Kunwald, the work met with a very friendly reception.—Having been unsuccessful in obtaining his discharge from the post of Royal Kapellmeister, Herr Felix von Weingartner will conduct the coming season of the Royal Orchestra's symphony concerts as before.—Richard Strauss has begun the composition of another opera, entitled 'Elektra,' after a poem by Hugo von Hoffmannsthal.

COLOGNE.

'Gunlöd,' the music-drama which Peter Cornelius left unfinished, has been completed, from the master's sketches, by Herr Wilhelm von Baussnern, and will be produced at the Municipal Theatre during the coming season.

ELBERFELD.

Mr. Albert Coates, of the Leipzig Municipal Theatre, has been chosen as chief conductor at the Elberfeld Theatre.

HAMBURG.

Grétry's almost forgotten opera 'The two misers' is announced for performance at the Municipal Theatre during the autumn season. A 'new version' by Richard Kleinmichel will be used.

LEIPZIG.

Auber's masterpiece, 'La muette de Portici,' which had not been heard here for a number of years, was revived on August 19. The brilliant work was warmly received, though the performance left something to be desired.

MILAN.

Strauss's 'Salome' has been accepted for performance at La Scala Theatre. Signor Toscanini will conduct the work, which the director of La Scala Theatre, Signor Giulio Gatti-Casazza, heard—and admired—in Cologne during the summer festival week.

PARIS.

The announcement is made that 'Vakula, the smith,' a forgotten opera by Tchaikovsky, will be produced by the Opera Comique during the coming season. The work, which was written before 'Eugene Onegin,' obtained the prize of 1,000 roubles at some competition, but failed to satisfy the audience at its production. The libretto, based on a fairy tale by Gogol, is said to have been the cause of the fiasco, but it is hoped that after a thorough overhauling it may pass muster before a Parisian audience, especially as the music contains great beauties.

PESARO.

Signor Mascagni has won his much discussed action against the Liceo Rossini. His dismissal has been declared unjustifiable, and he has been awarded the right to claim damages for wrongful dismissal.

The following are some of the works selected by various musical Societies in London and the suburbs for performance during the winter of 1906-7:

Royal Choral Society (conductor Sir Frederick Bridge)—Messiah, Elijah, Hiawatha, Alexander's Feast, Pied piper of Hamelin (Parry), Dream of Gerontius, and The Kingdom.

London Choral Society (conductor Mr. Arthur Fagge)—The Kingdom, Paradise Lost (Bossi)—first performance in England, Faust (Berlioz), Requiem (Brahms), Samson and Delilah, and The blessed Damosel (Dalhousie Young).

Central London Choral Society (conductor Mr. David J. Thomas)—Hymn of Praise, May-Day, By Babylon's wave (Gounod), and Lord Ullin's daughter (Jackson).

South London Choral Association (conductor Mr. Leonard C. Venables)—Creation (parts 1 and 2), First Walpurgis Night, Flag of England, Lay of the last minstrel (MacCunn), and John Gilpin (Cowen).

Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestra! Union (conductor Mr. John E. Borland)—Creation (parts 1 and 2), Blest pair of Sirens, Lord Ullin's daughter, Caractacus, Pied piper of Hamelin (Parry).

Bromley Choral Society (conductor Mr. Frederic Fertel)—Elijah and The ancient mariner (Barnett).

East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society (conductor Mr. George R. Ceiley)—Creation, Banner of St. George, and Pied piper of Hamelin (Parry).

Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. John E. Borland)—Messiah, Athalie, Hiawatha's wedding-feast.

Stroud Green Choral Association (conductor Mr. H. J. Timothy)—Pied piper of Hamelin (Parry), and John Gilpin (Cowen).

The Southport Musical Festival is to be held on October 24, 25, and 26, under the general conductorship of Dr. Henry Coward. The choral works to be performed are: Elijah, Ode to the north-east wind (Cliffe), Pied piper of Hamelin (Parry) and the Dream of Gerontius—the last two works under the direction of their respective composers, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will conduct his Symphonic variations on an African air. Mr. Arthur Speed is the chorus-master and Mr. R. G. Rothwell will preside at the organ.

A veteran musical enthusiast, Dr. Astley, J.P., the venerable President of the Dover Choral Union, presided on September 10 at the annual meeting of that Society, of which Mr. H. J. Taylor is conductor. Although ninety-five years old, Dr. Astley is as keen in musical matters as he has ever been.

The Rev. E. Capel Cure will deliver a course of twelve lectures—in connection with the Cambridge University local lectures—at Exeter during the coming winter, his subject being 'The history and structure of musical form.'

Mr. John Francis Barnett has written a volume of reminiscences which will shortly be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Erratum. September issue, p. 601, col. 2, line 22 from the bottom: for '1870,' read '1860.'

Answers to Correspondents.

STUDENT.—J. L. Hatton's fine song 'To Anthea' was probably composed during his first sojourn in America, 1848-1850. It forms No. 4 of nineteen 'Songs and other poems by Herrick, Ben Jonson, and Sedley,' the preface to which is dated 'London, August, 1850.' An interesting letter which Hatton wrote from Hastings, U.S.A., on June 14, 1849, describes a non-catch fishing excursion in which he took part—'a worm at one end, and a fool at the other,' to use his own words. After mentioning his loneliness, he goes on to say: 'But I have a pianoforte and can amuse myself with writing songs from old Herrick's poetry. I shall have a goodly stock of them when I return.' No one will deny that 'To Anthea' was a good catch in those Herrickian waters, and that Hatton 'amused' himself to the best advantage in a line more congenial to him than fishing. For further particulars see THE MUSICAL TIMES, September, 1899, p. 613. 'To Anthea' was originally set to music in John Playford's 'Treasury of music,' and there entitled 'Love's votary.' The composer was Henry Lawes, and as the above book appeared in 1669, the setting was published during Herrick's lifetime. Hatton may, or may not, have been aware of this fact.

E. A. M.—Beethoven's symphonies are analysed by Sir George Grove in his 'Beethoven and his nine symphonies' (Novello). An analysis, also by Sir George Grove, of Mozart's Symphony in C appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1906. Analyses of several of Haydn's and Mozart's pianoforte sonatas are to be found in H. C. Banister's 'Lectures on musical analysis' (George Bell & Sons) and Ridley Prentice's 'The Musician: a guide for pianoforte students,' six books (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.).

KIRCHNER.—No one publisher issues a complete edition of Kirchner's compositions. Mr. Dannreuther, in Grove's 'Dictionary of music and musicians,' says that they number about 100. Riemann's 'Dictionary of music' purports to give a complete list, but it is without publishers' names. Many of the compositions are referred to in a pamphlet entitled 'Theodor Kirchner, Ein biographisch-kritischer Essay' by A. Niggli (Leipzig: Gebrüder Hug).

H. R. C.—A list of books on Greek music may be found at the end of the article on 'Greek music' in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of music and musicians' (vol. 2). See also Hugo Riemann's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte' (1904), and the chapter on 'Greek music' in the 'Oxford history of music' (Polyphonic Period, vol. 1). We do not know of any book that specially treats of Roman music.

PIANOLA.—Paladilhe's 'Mandolinata' is marked to be played (on the pianoforte) dotted crotchet=108. Therefore, if the speed marked for the pianolaist is 'very slow all through' there is evidently a mistake somewhere. Perhaps the mechanism (of the pianola) is of the andante species, and therefore objects to be hurried.

ENVOUS.—'What solos suitable for playing at concerts would you advise me to learn?' is too portentous a question to answer in this column. That you are 'anxious to play them from memory' is a laudable ambition on your part which will doubtless not make you 'envious' of others less gifted.

BARITONE.—(1) An edition of Rossini's 'Largo al factotum' in the key of B flat is published abroad and can be procured. (2) Lady Macfarren's English translations of Schumann's songs can be recommended. They are published at popular prices. (3) Why not get the two songs from 'Zampa' and 'Traviata' transposed?

J. P. H.—(1) A portrait of Beethoven appeared as a supplement to THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1901. (2) As the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of music and musicians' is issued at the rate of one volume per annum, the work will probably be completed by the end of 1908.

NEWLYN.—In order to get your Waltz, March, and Violin solo published, your best plan will be to submit them to a music publisher. He will relieve you of all responsibility of copyrighting the pieces—that is, provided he be disposed to acquire the copyright. There's the rub!

N. M. M.—The book on Wagner referred to in our September issue (p. 606) is to be obtained of Mr. Quaritch, Piccadilly, price £50—not shillings!

J. S.—The two dots forming part of the bass clef indicate that the line between the dots is that on which the clef note (F) is placed. The F clef is the oldest clef, its use extends back to the 10th century.

OBOE.—Messrs. Novello will, upon application, send you a classified catalogue of School Music, also a selection of School Songs on approval.

MAC.—An inquest was held and the interment took place, but the place of burial is not generally known.

E. J. S.—We can only suggest that you should advertise.

MAGNE.—As in speech, not the broad A (Abraham).

The first performance of Elgar's 'The Apostles' in Australia was given by the Melbourne Philharmonic Society in the Town Hall on August 14, before an audience which completely filled the Hall and which heard the work with reverent attention and appreciation. The Society was fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, whose skill and experience was of great value at the organ, and of Mr. Andrew Black as the exponent of the part of Judas, the other vocalists being Miss Lilian Reid, Mr. and Madame Gregor Wood, Mr. Horace Stevens, and Mr. A. C. Bottoms. Every credit is due to the Society for its enterprise in producing so important a work, and to Mr. George A. Peake for his enthusiastic labours in the preparation of the choir and orchestra.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City'. . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first performance has been quite successfully resisted; and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. The work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."

THE CANTICLES

POINTED FOR CHANTING.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER (August 6, 1906).

There is one branch of psalmody, however, which has been much neglected in all the Scottish Churches—that of chanting. Indeed, it seems that the art of chanting was lost by the Protestants at the Reformation, and is only now beginning to show signs of revival. This resuscitation would be accelerated if conductors of Scottish psalmody could be induced to use an excellent little book published by Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., London, entitled "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version) and the Canticles, pointed for Chanting." The editor, Mr. F. G. Edwards, has had much practical experience, and gives some valuable hints as to the best methods to be adopted in chanting; and has made an excellent selection of ancient and modern chants.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS (July 23, 1906).

The Psalms most generally in use have been selected, and following these are the Canticles—all pointed and assigned to appropriate chants. The editor, bearing in mind the maxim that "good chanting should be good declamation joined to a musical intonation," has adopted a system of pointing that is at once simple and natural. . . . The chants are admirably selected for the purpose intended. They mostly all possess melodic interest, and are free from harmonic complications, while their compass, and in particular the reciting notes, has been arranged to suit medium voices. The book makes congregational singing not only possible but simple.

CHRISTIAN WORLD (September 13, 1906).

"One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" is the title of a work just issued by Messrs. Novello, which has been edited by Mr. F. G. Edwards. Evidently the publishers think that there is a future for chanting in the Free Churches. The editor's directions in the preface concerning the troublesome reciting tone are admirable. It is to be hoped that they will be heeded. The Anglican chant is a compromise between unmeasured music, and it is full of traps. Hurry, gabble, and false accents are common. Where is really perfect chanting to be heard? The chants are well chosen from sources old and new, and in deciding what psalms to include the editor has had the help of Dr. Monro Gibson. The type of the words is delightfully large and clear.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS (July 30, 1906).

The aim has been to select such chants as are singable, and with some old favourites are combined new ones by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West. The book is certain to be appreciated, and the carefulness manifested by Mr. Edwards in his other contributions is also shown in this effort.

MUSICAL JOURNAL (September, 1906).

The pointing has been carefully done; it is simple and helpful to congregational singing.

LIFT UP YOUR HEARTS

A SACRED SYMPHONY, IN F

FOR

BASS SOLO, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 20.)

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Full Score and Orchestral parts in the Press.

THE TIMES.

It is very interesting, apart from its intrinsic beauty, which is great, to see how closely the classical form has been preserved. . . . The first movement, which is introduced by a bass soloist and choir, in the words, "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever," is a very original and finely developed Allegro, which only departs from the usual structural pattern at the close, when a dialogue between a violin and violoncello solo leads into the most charming movement of the work, an Allegretto amabile standing in the place of symphonic Scherzo. Its main melody is exquisitely suave, and a certain sedate graciousness calls up the image of some beautiful character. . . . The three "sayings" of Jesus chosen are such as point most distinctly to the essential part of Christian doctrine, since it is only through acceptance of these that the soul can be placed in the right attitude for the great ascription of praise which concludes the work and gives it its title, "Lift up your hearts." Here all of the finest quality, from the bass "intonation," as it might be called, set to a plain-song melody from Marbecke, and the splendid chorus "Holy, Holy, Holy," the theme of which is taken from the same source. Technically this number is a set of variations more or less in Chaconne form, but the analogy is not pressed too closely, and with all the resources of his great contrapuntal skill, his strongly individual kind of harmonization, and the beautiful reverence and spirituality which were manifested in "Everyman," the composer reaches something very like sublimity.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The novelty proved to be an attractive composition, with some fine opportunities for the chorus and many exceedingly charming orchestral passages. No applause, of course, was permitted, but the crowded audience listened with the deepest interest to Dr. Davies's beautiful numbers. It is not difficult to predict a great success for this clever work. It opens with the declaration for the bass soloist and chorus that "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever." This is followed by a long movement for the orchestra. Next comes a sombre soliloquy for the soloist, the words of which are taken from Ecclesiastes, the singer being supposed to be contemplating rather than sharing the human lot. The Finale consists of a setting of the Sursum Corda and Sanctus, the chorus work being of a plain-song character.

THE TRIBUNE.

The work is earnest, and there is enough in the music to remind us that the composer is a church organist, also enough to show that he is well aware of the changes which have come over the art of music—a spirit of freedom in the matter of harmonic progressions, and especially of form. The first movement, an Allegro energico, in which various themes are exposed and to a certain extent discussed, follows to a large extent ordinary symphonic form. It leads without break to an Allegretto amabile, softness and sweetness being the prevailing features of the movement, which, as a contrast to the preceding one, is decidedly effective. The solo for the bass voice, entitled "Soliloquy," ends with a semi-chorus, while in the Largo espressivo are heard "Three Sayings of Jesus." The final chorus of praise is mostly concerned with the "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts," in which the old plain-song version of the Sanctus is used.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Though the structure of the work may in its broad lines be referred to precedent, there is still ample scope left for individual treatment, and the music abounds in interesting and individual touches, so numerous and often so subtle that a very close acquaintance will be necessary to enable one to discover them all. . . . The first Allegro is founded on themes of great nobility, and here the composer reminds one of Brahms, not only in the general character of his music, but also in his power of welding fine details into a big and harmoniously conceived whole. The Allegretto, again, is charming, thoroughly genial and simple, without a trace of triviality, and combining conflicting rhythms without any suspicion of artificiality. . . . The Sanctus is most happy in conception, and the series of variations to which it gives rise suggests an endless Alleluia, and fit in perfectly with the general design. Altogether the work is original in design and full of interest.

THREE ELIZABETHAN PASTORALS

1. AN IDYLL.
2. AMONGST THE WILLOWS.
3. THE MORRIS DANCE.

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, each, Two Shillings.

Full Score and Orchestral parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

Dr. Brewer was represented by "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," sung by Mr. John Coates with such admirable effect that the last had to be repeated. This, a description of a Morris dance, is an enchanting picture of a country merry-making, set to some excellent anonymous words, which are probably old. "An Idyll" and "Amongst the Willows" are also beautiful in a more romantic vein, and the three songs are as good in their way as anything the composer has done. They are sure to become widely popular wherever bright songs with orchestral accompaniment are required.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In these little pieces, composed for tenor voice and orchestra, Dr. Brewer has opened up fresh ground, and shown a pretty talent for imitating the antique. The lyrics, by an old and anonymous author, are quaint and characteristic, while the music happily reflects their spirit and adapts itself to their form. All are charming, but the one most in favour this evening was "The Morris Dance," a very sprightly effusion which, encored at rehearsal, had to be repeated this evening.

MORNING POST.

Delicate and pleasing vocal pieces, which imparted a welcome lightness to the programme. They were sung by Mr. John Coates. The first, "An Idyll," proved the best in design, though the last won so much approval as to necessitate its repetition.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. John Coates sang three Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, composed for this Festival and conducted by the composer. Dr. Brewer has exactly hit off the sense of sixteenth-century music, and the Idyll which begins the series is exceedingly pretty, and was sung beautifully. Perhaps the best of the three was the "Morris Dance."

THE ATHENÆUM.

The first two of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals" composed by Dr. Herbert Brewer, are dainty, but the third, "The Morris Dance," is specially characteristic, and the accompaniment has been cleverly scored.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Brewer contributed a set of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," entitled respectively "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance." The quaint words, culled from a collection of Elizabethan lyrics, have suggested music whose lightness and fancy happily reflect their character. All three have genuine charm, but the daintiness of the quaint "Morris Dance," if not matchless, could not easily be matched for its daintiness and quaint humour, which, admirably interpreted by Mr. John Coates, so exhilarated the audience that a repetition was inevitable.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, were sung by Mr. John Coates. They are also well-written pieces. The last of the three, a Morris Dance, is very effective. Mr. Brewer evidently knows how to write for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A trio of dainty Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Herbert Brewer is clever and charming. The first, entitled "An Idyll," has a quiet lyrical grace. The last, "The Morris Dance," is riotously spirited, and was encored.

HEREFORD TIMES.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," written for the Festival by Dr. Herbert Brewer, proved very attractive, and were much appreciated. They are light in character, but quite charming in their picturesque and dainty treatment. "The Morris Dance" is the most striking of the three, as there is real fibre and character in it, the quaint dance being charmingly treated both vocally and instrumentally.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

Mr. Brewer made a distinct hit with his three songs. They are bright, tuneful, and at the same time scholarly. . . . Of the three songs "The Morris Dance" aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience, though that might well have been because admiration had been pent up till the trio was completed.

SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS ON AN AFRICAN AIR

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

THE TIMES.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor has built a set of beautiful and most interesting orchestral variations on the theme of a negro song or hymn, beginning "I'm troubled in mind," which is almost certainly of purely African origin. As at first presented it does not seem very promising, but the composer does wonders with it and yet preserves its essential character throughout. His work is finely expressive, beautifully scored, and original in design.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer of "Hiawatha" gives us on the present occasion a set of Symphonic Variations on a negro tune which is said to be familiar in America under the title "I'm troubled in mind." The melody in question is characteristic in form and rhythm, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor makes play with it in his own picturesque fashion. . . . It has enough of barbaric suggestion, while both in the handling of the theme and the general orchestral current of the piece there is no want of variety. . . . The new Variations were well, even brilliantly, played; and the audience, in accordance with Philharmonic traditions, greeted them with quite a burst of enthusiasm.

STANDARD.

"Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air," by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, is a work based on a bold theme, which is a real negro melody, and developed with clever orchestration. Effective use is made of the brass and woodwind, especially in the section where the theme assumes a march character. The composer, who conducted, obtained a vigorous rendering of his interesting work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's brilliant talent for orchestral writing is well known, but it has never served him better than in this case. His variations show remarkable freshness and originality of design, and they are scored with an astonishing command of the secrets of tone-colour. At times the influence of Dvorák, particularly in his "New World" vein, is to be traced in the work, but there is no suggestion of anything like plagiarism, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is to be congratulated upon having produced a work which deserves to take a definite place in the modern orchestral repertory.

EVENING STANDARD.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Orchestral Variations on an African Theme" has a genuine negro melody for its chief theme, which is developed with much ingenuity and varied orchestral colour characteristic of the composer's style. It is an effective work which ought to become popular.

MORNING POST.

The work heard for the first time last evening is one of the most striking he has as yet written. The title is perhaps a little misleading. Announced in one place as "Orchestral variations on an African theme," it is styled in another "Symphonic variations on a negro air." The word rhapsody would, however, be more suitable to describe the very brilliant orchestral piece the composer has constructed upon a theme which, we are told in the excellent analytical notes by Messrs. F. Gilbert Webb and Edgar F. Jacques, is known in America under the title of "I'm troubled in mind." There is nothing dry or scholastic in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's treatment of this theme, which undergoes many and varied transformations at his hands. The scoring is admirable throughout and the work is instinct with life and vigour. Under the composer's spirited direction the piece received an excellent interpretation and was evidently greatly appreciated.

DAILY NEWS.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Symphonic Variations on a Negro Air" has his characteristic picturesqueness and fervour. There is real pulse in his music. . . . It contains some good melodic material, and works up to an imposing climax.

GLOBE.

His "Orchestral Fantasia on a Negro Melody" is quite in his old vein. The air itself is both quaint and beautiful, and in his treatment of it he has not only employed all the resources of modern art, but he has also succeeded in preserving its character with singular skill, and the Fantasia is as interesting and effective a piece of work as he has given us for some time.

PALM MALL GAZETTE.

The work is one of haunting beauty, built as it is upon a pathetic negro melody which runs throughout like a golden thread. Certain works by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor which have followed his ever popular "Hiawatha" have not completely commended themselves to our critical judgment; but here his old, fine inspiration seems to have returned to him, and he treats his subject not only in a finely melodic but also in a finely artistic manner. He worked the whole composition up very gradually, but very emotionally, to a fine artistic finish.

THE GUARDIAN.

The theme chosen by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is a characteristically melancholy negro melody that does not at the outset appear very promising as the basis of modern variations. But the composer handles it with such spirit and resource, and adorns it with such a wealth of picturesque orchestration that the interest of the work never flags. The most attractive section is that which stands for the slow movement in the symphonic scheme, a passage of rich glowing melody, treated with much polyphonic ingenuity.

THE SOUL'S RANSOM

A PSALM OF THE POOR

(SINFONIA SACRA)

FOR

SOPRANO AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

String Parts (in the Press); Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

The instrumental introduction is most impressive, and finely scored; the fine chorus into which it leads, "Who can number the sands of the sea?" is but the first of a series of noble choral numbers, such as the composer knows so well how to write. The passage "The word of the Lord most high" is worked to a fine fugal climax. After the first bass solo, another exceedingly beautiful chorus, "We look for light," carries us to the soprano solo, "Why are ye so fearful?" in the course of which several of the Beatitudes are uttered by the single voice and commented on by the chorus. This is grateful to the singer and of lovely effect. The next section is an almost dramatic version of Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones, and this again is worked up to a vigorous climax with great imaginative skill. The beautiful soprano solo, "The people that walked in darkness," leads to the final chorus, "See now ye that love the light," set to words that we may guess to be the composer's own, so manly is their swing and so fine their feeling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Hubert Parry, apart from a somewhat lengthy orchestral introduction, proceeds in the fashion of modern oratorio, modifying it, however, by giving the orchestra more than usual prominence and significance. . . . After a slow and serious introduction, the chorus utters a number of aphorisms concerning wisdom in the manner, if not in the language, of Ecclesiasticus. Following this, the bass soloist carries the discourse further, enlarging upon the vanity of riches and the fate of the fool. The chorus answer that "they who look for light see only darkness. We grope for the wall like the blind; yea, we grope as those who have no eyes." At this point the voice, soprano, of a Spirit is heard proclaiming the blessedness of the poor, since theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. The chorus recognise the Spirit that quickens, and the solo utters some of the Beatitudes, each of which evokes an appropriate comment from the people, who finally decide "It is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth." The bass soloist, now impersonating the Prophet of the valley of dry bones and having the help of the chorus, illustrates the change from darkness and death to light and life by telling once more his marvellous tale, after which he repeats the Divine promise of renewed life for Israel. The rest is joy and thanksgiving, expressed by a soprano solo and final chorus. The high purport of this "book" cannot be denied, nor can one refuse to see in the work a sermon which, enforced by the power of music, may bring comfort to the poor and those who are cast down.

MORNING POST.

The music made a profound impression. The score contains evidence of all the sound musicianship associated with the name of the composer, and many sections are of marked originality and individuality. Sir Hubert Parry occasionally speaks in terms somewhat foreign to his past utterances, but they serve to accentuate the ability shown in the Sinfonia, a work which by its form and execution is calculated not only to sustain the composer's reputation, but to augment it. The form is unconventional and thoroughly modern, but in its execution the composer has never departed from either his customary melodiousness or grace, and the work offers a striking example of the possibility of writing modern music that is neither ugly nor involved. There is much tender expressiveness in the musical setting of the three Beatitudes, all of which close in the same beautiful manner with the entry of the chorus. These sections without doubt form some of the best music Sir Hubert Parry has yet written. . . . The choruses contain many effective passages, and among them may be mentioned the striking unison at the words "Son of Man" and the beautiful music associated with "Prophecy unto the wind."

DAILY NEWS.

The score may be said to scintillate with scholarly musical figures, whose chief beauties are to be found in their utter dissimilarity to any compositions except those of Sir Hubert Parry. The popular baronet, in a word, represents only himself where the art of musical expression is concerned, and more than this surely need not be said.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Sir Hubert Parry's sacred symphony, "The Soul's Ransom," which has been specially composed for this festival, was heard in the afternoon under his personal supervision, and it created a most favourable impression. The director of the Royal College of Music has written his own text, which, by the way, has as its motto, "If thou desire wisdom, keep the Commandments," and the majority of his lines are based on Biblical passages exhorting the Christian to have courage in himself and confidence in his creed. Probably what will insure lasting popularity for this masterly work are the choruses, all of which are of a vigorous, inspiring character. They are extremely effective, and contain plenty of broad, flowing melodies calculated to please the ears of the earnest musician.

THE TRIBUNE.

In the introductory instrumental movement are set forth the themes on which much of the music is built, and either from the character of the melody or some rhythmic feature they are easy to retain in the memory. . . . The most notable part of the work is the section dealing with the graphic description in Ezekiel of the valley of dry bones into which was breathed the Spirit of the Lord. Such a subject would tempt many a modern composer to write music of a highly sensational character; but Sir Hubert Parry, while catching the spirit of the words, refrains from making them an excuse for a mere musical display. . . . A second soprano solo leads to the final chorus, "See now ye that love the light," admirably worked up to an effective climax. The choir evidently enjoyed the grateful music provided, and sang with great success.

GLOBE.

"The Soul's Ransom," described by Sir Hubert Parry, its composer, as a "Sinfonia Sacra," and "A Psalm of the Poor," is laid out for soprano and baritone solos, chorus, and orchestra, the composer having compiled his libretto from Scriptural sources. "The Soul's Ransom" marks no departure from the composer's well-known penchant for didactic and reflective writing, much of which is grateful in character.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The style of the music throughout is dignified, and the composer expresses his thoughts and feelings in very direct manner. As in "The Love which casteth out Fear," which he wrote for the Worcester Festival, Sir Hubert's chief aim seems to be not to display his learning and skill, but rather, in the fewest possible notes, to intensify the solemn words. There is latent power in his music—a power which as the work becomes familiar will make itself more strongly felt.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Like most of his choral works of like dimensions, it is rather a poem the symmetrical and logical form of which has been allowed to suggest an equally symmetrical musical clothing. Recognised musical devices, fugal and the like, are employed, but less for their own sake than as an aid to the adequate interpretation of the poetic ideas underlying the work. . . . Sir Hubert Parry has, I think, had a greater eye to orchestral richness than usual. The colour-scheme is certainly more varied and less conventional than it has often been of late, and many of the orchestral passages have a charm of their own quite apart from questions thematic or constructive. A very striking instance is where the Prophet tells of the shaking of the dry bones, the atmosphere of strangeness and mystery being happily conveyed, and without any straining after effect. The introduction, too, is in the composer's best style. It is solemn and intensely impressive. . . . The choruses are as virile and vigorous as ever, and they were well sung, while the orchestra was heard to particular advantage, all the details of the score being beautifully brought out.

FOR STRINGS

(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s. ; Quartet Parts, 4s. ; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PAUL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.
